Oil Consumers Await Price Rise As OPEC Nations Meet This Week

By PETER T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Dec. 12—Three years ago, before Christmas, six angry countries surrounded the Persian Gulf met in heran and doubled the price of a barrel of light Arabian crude oil. On top of taller increases just a few months earlier, that decision, in the view of many experts, probably changed the world as such as any event since World War II. On Wednesday those six countries, along with the seven others that make up the price-fixing cartel known as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, will meet in Doha, capital of the tiny Persian Gulf sheikhdom of Qatar, to announce an intention of raising the price again. This will be a different kind of meeting.

For that reason and for many others, experts here doubt that OPEC will raise the price this week by more than 8 to 11 percent, which some Western officials have said privately they could tolerate. Some of the experts predict that OPEC will vote for a small increase now and keep its options open for another price meeting next spring, when they hope to have a clearer reading of what the policies of the Carter Administration will be. "If Ford had been elected," said a leading British oil industry consultant, "Saudi Arabia would have gone directly for its own ceiling of 10 percent. But, with Ford gone, they're faced with a new diplomatic challenge. If you're dealing with an unknown quantity, you first want to fence." Animosities toward Israel still seethes among the Arabs in OPEC. But, with a standoff in the war, other issues have been chipping away the ideological glue.

Joblessness Among Youths Is Raising Worry in Europe

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

ARIS, Dec. 12—The blight of joblessness has fallen over Western Europe. In the United States, it is school youths—often from the least favored strata, often with inadequate vocational training or an education mismatched with the needs of employers—are the hardest hit. American cities rising youth unemployment has been associated with increased crime and other violence, suicides, drug addiction, prostitution. An investigation has found fears running deep in many Common Market countries that may be headed down a similar path. Economic and social forces are combining to make youths into what the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development terms "a new, underemployed group."

supplemented sorely stretched national labor forces, Europeans have now entered what most specialists believe will be an extended period of slower growth. As economic activity has slumped, some foreign workers have departed. Yet unemployment is still climbing because growth now and at the rate being forecast until 1980 is inadequate to absorb the new entries into the labor market. Formal statistics tell part of the story. In the nine Common Market countries those under 25 looking for jobs have more than doubled since 1973 and now account for 1 out of 3 of the total five million unemployed. The overall unemployment rate for the Common Market's 105 million-member work force is about 4.75 percent, but among those under 25 the rate is about 11 percent, with 1.7 million of the 15 million foreign workers

Thousands shopped, strolled or played on Fifth Avenue mall yesterday

Sunday Buyers Throng 5th Ave., Closed as a Mall

By ISADORE BARMASH

Thousands of affluent shoppers and not-so-affluent window-shoppers thronged Fifth Avenue and the Upper East Side in a holiday mood yesterday, turning the thoroughfare into a festive mall as four major stores opened for the first time on a Sunday. The crowds had to contend with light rains and a raw chill in the air, but they did not have to put up with cars, buses or any other vehicular traffic on Fifth Avenue between 34th and 57th Streets, although there was cross traffic. Strollers encountered choral singing, sports activities, dancing and bell-ringing Santa Clauses.

Vehicular traffic diverted from Fifth Avenue to other streets was moderate to heavy during the day, the police reported, but there were no tie-ups. Buses on six routes that normally use Fifth Avenue were sent down Lexington and Seventh Avenues to 34th Street. The stores opened at noon, but the crowds began gathering earlier to saunter on the avenue and gaze at the artistic window displays. As many as 250 people waited outside Bloomingdale's on Lexington Avenue, and hundreds more lined up

BEAUME VOWS FREEZE ON REALTY TAX RATE FOR NEXT FIVE YEARS

'WE'VE TURNED THE CORNER'

Confident Mayor Silent on How He Will Avoid Rises or Honor His Pledge Without a 2d Term

By MAURICE CARROLL
New York City's real-estate tax rate will be "capped" for five years—right through the next mayoral term—Mayor Beame promised yesterday.

But he declined to give details of how he intended to avert the customary annual rises in the tax rate, or to agree that a five-year promise amounted to a declaration that he would run for a second term. After two years of rarely relieved gloom in public portrayal of the municipal economy, Mayor Beame said that he thought "we've turned the corner" and to reassure the people who own homes and business properties that New York City would be a nice place to stay, he pledged stability in the taxes they would pay on their real estate.

The leveling off would help to strengthen the city's overall economy and to underline its attractiveness as a place to live and do business in, Mr. Beame indicated.

Cuts in Services Opposed
He said that a freeze on the real-estate tax rate would be accompanied by a determination not to cut further into the municipal services that were reduced as the fiscal crisis forced reductions in the city's spending.

Asked after an appearance on a television press-conference show how he could bind the next Mayor to a five-year program, Mr. Beame replied with a smile: "This is my program."

Amplifying, he dodged discussing who might be in charge at City Hall after next year. The tax-capping pledge was in place, he said. If someone else should be Mayor and want to change it, that would be up to him.

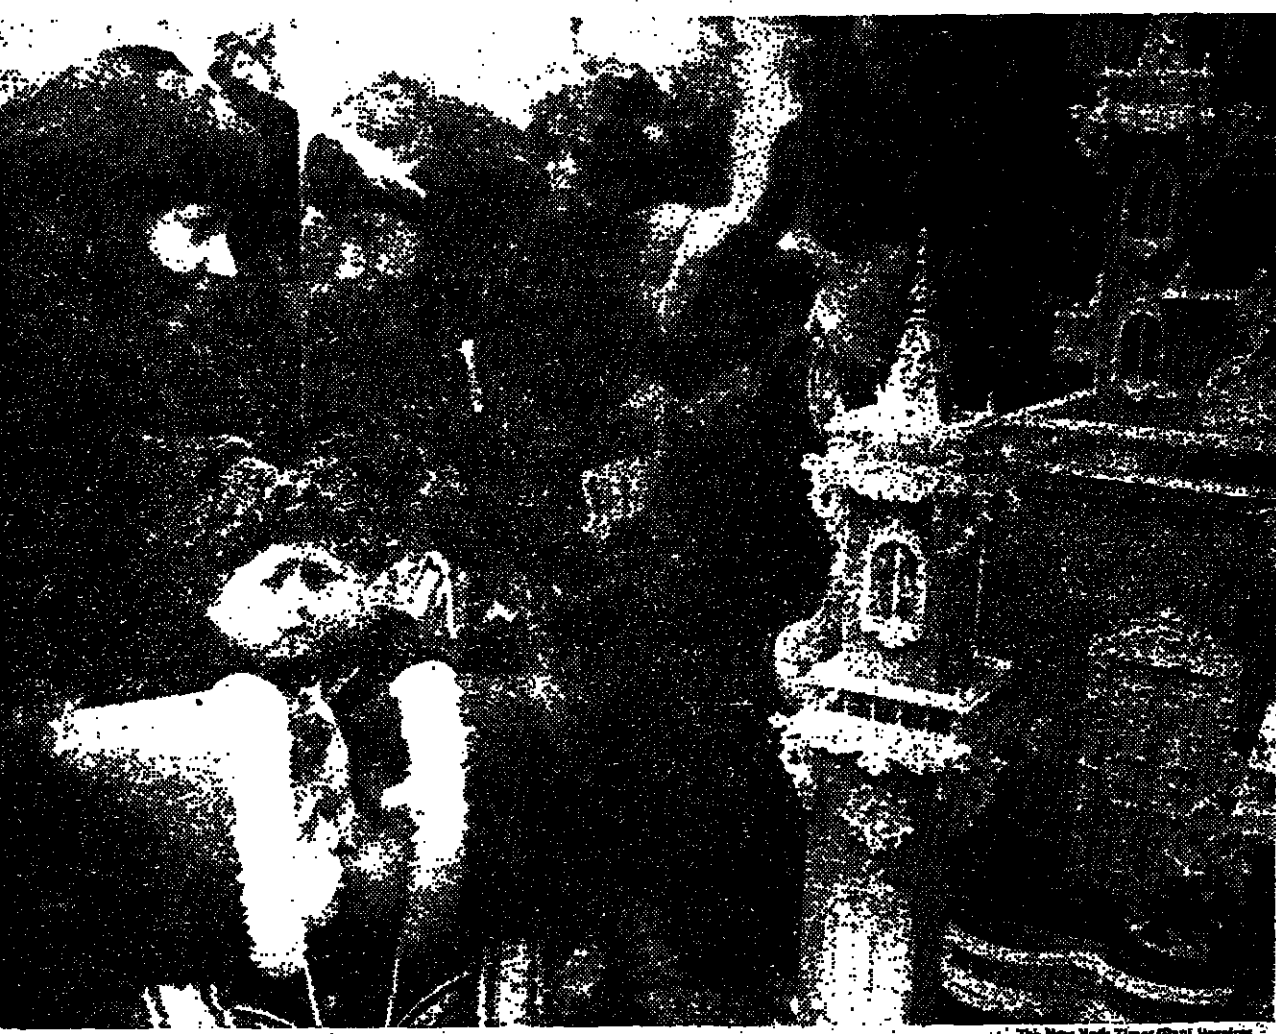

The Mayor, who faces a deadline Wednesday for presentation of a plan to save the city's latest fiscal wound—the court order to repay $1 billion in short-term loans—listed satisfactory solutions of that problem as one of three things to which he was devoting his thoughts to the exclusion, he insisted, of politics.

Long-Range Planning Indicated
"We're in command, we're going to resolve it," Mr. Beame said, leaning forward in the pale-blue bucket seat toward his three questioners on the show, the WABC-TV "Eyewitness News Conference."

And, he went on, his administration will cope successfully with the $900 million deficit that must be closed as part of the three-year financial plan in the budget year starting July 1.

Finally, he promised to make public soon a long-range plan "to strengthen the economic fiber of our city." Included in this, he said, will be the promise to keep the real-estate tax from rising beyond the level to which the budget-balancing mandate brings it as of July 1. With this move, the Mayor said, homeowners and business people will know for the next five years at least, where we're going.

Prison Voting by Local Officials

Actions Viewed as Referendum on the Socialist Government

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

BON, Dec. 12—The Portuguese tri selected local officials in an election that is generally being viewed as a referendum on the performance of the 11-month-old minority Socialist Government. Prime Minister Mario Soares declared last week that his Socialist Party "would not govern against the will of the people." This was interpreted to mean that the Socialists suffered a substantial loss; they would pull out of the Government or agree to form a coalition. Early returns, mostly from the conservative north, showed the Socialists slightly ahead, with the Social Democrats winning second, followed by the conservative centrists. With 10 percent of the country's local districts reporting, the Socialists had 29.5 percent of the vote, the Social Democrats, 29 percent and the conservative centrists, 18.5 percent. The communists' United People's Electoral front drew 15.1 percent. The Government and most of the politi-

Painter, 80, Loses Studio in Eviction

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN
Special to The New York Times

For more than 30 years, members of royalty, captains of industry, pillars of society and just plain folks have sat in the comfortable clutter of apartment 406 in the Hotel des Artistes to pose for portraits by Michel Alexander Werboff. But after five years of legal wrangling, and just as his 80th birthday has passed, Mr. Werboff's era in the elegant building at 67th Street and Central Park West is coming to an end. The Russian-born painter is about to be evicted from the three-bedroom duplex apartment, for which he has been paying $239 a month under rent control, in an act he calls "artistic murder."

Across town, on East 64th Street, Donald Hillman, who purchased apartment 406 as a cooperative for $40,000 in 1970 and who has been paying the maintenance and carrying charges on it ever since, said that his six years of "frustration and agony" were almost over. Mr. Hillman and his wife, both of whom are lawyers, and their six-month-old child are finally preparing to move in. The Hotel des Artistes became fully cooperative in 1970, and Mr. Hillman bought the apartment after Mr. Wer-

Carter's Aides Fear Tight Security May Cost Him Touch With Public

By HEDRICK SMITH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Direct personal contact with ordinary voters was a deliberate hallmark of President-elect Jimmy Carter's election campaign and even of his tenure as Governor of Georgia. But some of his own entourage fear that he is getting out of touch. They worry about the enforced isolation of the Presidency that has enveloped Mr. Carter in a shield of security men and a horde of reporters who follow wherever he goes in public. Greg Schneiders, who as Mr. Carter's appointments secretary probably spends more time with him than anyone else outside his immediate family, remarked the other day that it was increasingly difficult to maintain "relations with the outside world, which is getting noisier and more remote."

"In Iowa, when he was campaigning," Mr. Schneiders recalled, "Jimmy could walk up and talk to people. He had some security in the campaign, but now—since everything has grown in quantum leaps, first after the convention and even more after the election—it's become hard for him to function with people on a one-to-one basis."

A Complaint From Nader
Such public figures as Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, whom Mr. Carter invited in the campaign to keep in touch with him, have complained that now, as President-elect, he is a hard man to reach. Mr. Carter has tried to break out of isolation by meeting groups of businessmen and prospective candidates for top posts in his administration and by making scores of telephone calls to leaders around the country with whom he is consulting about his Cabinet choices. So heavy is that traffic, Mr. Schneiders told a group of Washington reporters Thursday, Mr. Carter sometimes spends several hours a day on the phone.

In sessions with Congressional leaders and others, Mr. Carter has made a point of giving them his personal phone number and inviting them to call him. Actually, Mr. Schneiders disclosed, there is a pecking order among those granted that courtesy: The great bulk of them have been given a switchboard number in Plains and only about 35 to 40—including Mr. Nader—have acquired the number that Mr. Carter himself answers. Although intensely preoccupied with the intricacies of Cabinet selection, Mr. Carter nonetheless finds time for small talk with close aides about trivial topics such as "life around Plains," Mr. Schneiders said. Some of those from outside his immediate entourage have found him composed

CUT BUSINESS TAXES, NEW YORK CITY URGED

Panel Says Reductions Are Vital if Job Losses Are to Be Halted

By MICHAEL STERN

Large cuts in city taxes on manufacturers to stop the economic erosion that has cost New York 500,000 factory jobs since 1950 were recommended yesterday by a commission appointed by Mayor Beame.

The Temporary Commission on City Finances said its proposed reductions in the business income, sales and commercial rent taxes, plus other measures, might cost the city $80 million in the first two years they were effective. But it asserted that by the end of the third year the cuts would stimulate enough new employment and business activity to make up the $90 million fully and bring in substantial new revenues as well.

"What the commission is recommending," said its chairman, former Supreme Court Justice Owen McGivern, "is that the city make a profitable investment in its future by giving up some of today's revenues to dramatically increase tomorrow's employment and revenues."

The judge warned that if the city failed to act and kept taxes at currently high levels, another 150,000 manufacturing jobs might be lost by 1981, with a consequent drop of $500 million in revenues.

After receiving the report, Mayor Beame thanked the commission for its work but made no direct comment on its proposals. He said he would make tax proposals of his own in the economic development plan that has been in preparation in City Hall since January and that is expected to be announced before the end of the year.

Young Laotians Are Re-educated On Quiet Island

VIENTIANE, Laos, Dec. 12—Two hours north of here by road, the Nam Ngum River valley has been transformed into a vast lake studded with islands of submerged forest. The fishermen who work there sail between islets stripped of leaves and branches jutting out of the blue water against a skyline of foud-capped mountains. Although the Laotian Government eventually hopes to turn this sublime panorama into a tourist attraction, at present it has a more important role. The lake feeds the generators of the Nam Ngum dam, which supplies Vientiane and Northeast Thailand with power.

The authorities have also found a use for some of the islands. Since April of last year, four months after the Communists seized power, over 2,000 young people have been taken there for political "re-education."

Last month, 500 new recruits were rounded up in Vientiane and shipped to Monkey Island, which is actually three islands, two for men and one for women. The islands have officially been renamed Men's Island, Women's Island and Copper Island.

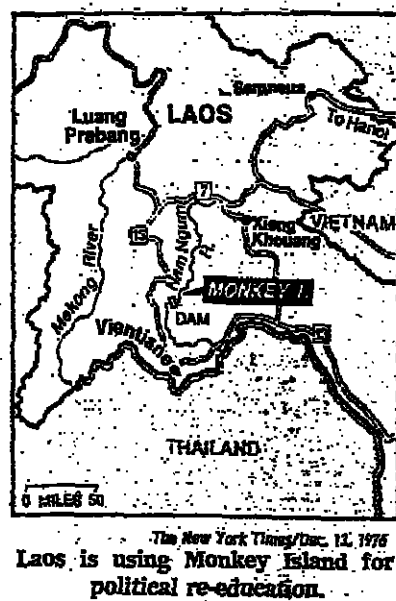

Officials say local authorities decide who should be sent there and that the 1,500 men and 500 women detainees, who range in age from 8 to 70 but most of whom are young, are former drug addicts, prostitutes and "hooligans, a term that seems to cover beggars, pickpockets, hippies and youngsters who showed too much interest in Western culture."

Sichan Srivong, a 32-year-old welfare official who acts as deputy chairman of the committee running the islands, emphatically denies that these are political prisoners. He says none has been charged with any offense. He says they are "victims of the social evils created by the imperialists and the old, corrupt society in which people drank, played cards, went to night clubs, bought girls and just lived off foreign aid, doing no productive work."

He admits that soon after the first batch arrived, 11 young men and women tried to swim away, getting only as far as the next island before they were sent back. But he says 500 have been allowed to visit their families, 284 have returned home after six-month stays and 384 are due to be released next week. The length of detention on the island is not fixed, he said. It depends on "how quickly they show, from their conduct, that they understand the Government's political line and are ready to take up a new life," he said.

On the surface, conditions on the island seem humane and even soothing, like a poorly organized Boy Scout camp, as one Western diplomat put it. But the visitor occasionally glimpses a sullen and resentful face, and in Vientiane stories circulate about the harsh cold-turkey treatment given to addicts and a shortage of medicine for the sick.

One or two soldiers carrying rifles can be seen, and loudspeakers in the trees tell their own story. Since the first detainees arrived early last year, they have cleared the forest themselves, built simple bamboo and rattan huts and planted vegetables.

Laos is using Monkey Island for political re-education.

Rice and meat are provided by the government.

Apart from work, these detainees have to study eight documents with themes ranging from elementary Marxism to the special responsibility of young people to build up the country and to the need to become honest and productive citizens who are "masters of themselves."

They are also taught that the French colonialists and American imperialists brought about the vices of the old regime, exploited the natural wealth of Laos and destroyed some of it with bombs, and that "the U.S. imperialists and the reactionaries are our enemies, but the American people are our friends."

Kamsan, a 23-year-old former teacher from Vientiane whose family has fled to Thailand, told visitors in the presence of the authorities that she had been "invited" to come to the women's island by the government a month ago "because I was living a life of luxury, always going out and having fun and not working."

She admits she was afraid at first, wondering why they wanted to take her so far away from Vientiane. "After two weeks of study, I realized," she said. "Now I am learning a job and am very grateful to the Government."

Reports on Other Camps

It was reported from Washington last month that thousands of former rightists and neutralist Laotians were confined in harsh and repressive internment camps scattered throughout Laos.

Reports from escaped and released prisoners and from letters reaching the outside from those still confined gave a picture of widely differing conditions within the camps. They ranged from short-term "re-education" facilities for former "undesirables" such as prostitutes to what amounted to forced labor camps for 40,000 to 50,000 former soldiers of anti-Communist army units in Laos.

A Leading Lebanese Christian Hunted In Third Attempt on Life This Year

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Dec. 12—The third attempt this year has been made on the life of Raymond Ede, the prominent Lebanese Christian leader.

Shots were fired at the 62-year-old Mr. Ede as he was entering his home in the western part of Beirut late last night. He was slightly wounded in a leg. Elements of the Syrian-dominated Arab deterrent force who guard the nearby radio station cordoned off the area and began investigating the incident. No arrests have been made yet.

The first attempt on Mr. Ede's life took place in May, and the second a month ago in the same spot. In each of the earlier incidents Mr. Ede was also injured in the leg.

There was speculation that whoever was behind the action was trying only to frighten Mr. Ede, who was an unsuccessful presidential candidate early this year.

A Critic of Syria's Role

Mr. Ede, who heads the National Bloc Party, had refused to side with militant Christians during the civil war. He continued to live in the Muslim-dominated west of Beirut. He has been a consistent and outspoken critic of the Syrian involvement in the Lebanese crisis, especially Syria's large contribution to the Arab deterrent force.

Another shooting incident, in a Christian quarter today, was viewed as an attempt to assassinate Camille Chamoun, a top right-wing Christian leader and a former president.

The shooting took place in the afternoon between Mr. Chamoun's bodyguards, who were in a jeep escorting him as he drove in his private car, and two men on a motorcycle. Witnesses said the bodyguards became suspicious of the two men because they tried to cut in front of Mr. Chamoun's auto. The jeep stopped the motorcycle and an argument developed. It then turned into a shootout in which three of the bodyguards and the two riders on the motorcycle were wounded. They were all rushed to a hospital and investigations were started by the deterrent force. The identity of the gunmen involved was not disclosed.

The 76-year-old Mr. Chamoun is the leader of the National Liberal Party, the second largest rightist Christian force in the country.

Several explosions were reported yesterday in the district of Koura in north, and in the Bekaa valley in east. A statement by the commander of the deterrent force said measures being taken to deal firmly with such sive elements.

Life Returning to Normal

Despite such incidents, life has gradually returning to normal. Lebanese now take such limited violence in stride. They have resigned themselves to the devastation brought on by months of civil war, and have begun to pick up the pieces.

A vast fruit-and-vegetable market emerged in the area that formed the between Moslem and Christian quarters as well as merchants held a series of meetings to discuss renewal of nomic activity. This week, owners of international hotels will get together to discuss the future of their enterprises.

'Anti-Fascist' Group in Spain Says It Seized Aide, Asks Release of 15

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, Dec. 12—The identity of the members of the right-wing president of the advisory Council of State, who was abducted from his Madrid office by a group of men yesterday morning, remained in doubt today.

It was from the recovery of a white van believed to have been used in the abduction, the police reported, that the group of men, including Antonio de Oriol y Urquijo, a wealthy politician and industrialist, was maintained at Madrid's airport.

The group, called the First of October 'Anti-Fascist' Resistance, took responsibility for the kidnapping in a note left in a telephone booth.

The note said: "Our organization, through this action, our organization, rejects the rejection of the farce of the referendum, the note said, referring to the referendum scheduled for Dec. 15, which the government's proposal to create elections in Spain.

Release of 15 Demanded

The note demanded that 15 "patriotic antifascist" prisoners, some of them leftists and others members of the separatist organization E.T.A., be freed and flown to Algeria in exchange for the liberty of the 63-year-old Mr. de Oriol, who served as Justice Minister in Franco's Spain.

The security of Oriol depends on the "Our organization is prepared and ready to do anything."

United Press International quoted the note as saying that the kidnappers "have identified 'definitely' as members of the First of October group."

The kidnapping immediately heated the atmosphere, with right-wingers for sterner law-and-order measures three days before the meticulously planned referendum, which should mark a break with the Franco past.

The note also eclipsed delicate negotiations between leftist and right-of-center oppositionists who have been seeking to hold with Minister Adolfo Suarez on the rules for the parliamentary elections scheduled for next year.

Chinese, Used to Bland News, Now Getting Sensations

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Dec. 12—For the Chinese people, accustomed to a bland diet of politically correct news and entertainment, the last few months have brought a series of sensational press reports and radio broadcasts. Of all these, perhaps the most melodramatic are a stream of recent broadcasts from Hubei Province in central China. There, the local radio asserts, supporters of Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's wife, and three other now-disgraced members of the Chinese Communist Party Politburo carried out a concerted campaign over the last few years to topple the regular provincial leadership.

If the broadcasts can be believed, the dissidents, who called themselves the "rebels," set up their own opposition provincial party committee, signed directives in its name, pasted up wall posters calling for attacks on the offices of their enemies, organized work stoppages in factories and even beat up peasants and killed workers who opposed them.

According to the Hubei radio, these "black hands" were invited to Peking to meet privately with Miss Chiang and Wang Hung-wen, another of the so-called Gang of Four, who promised to give them the post of first party secretary in the province. Miss Chiang and Mr. Wang then dispatched agents disguised as "reporters" and members of the staff of Tsinghua University in Peking, which they controlled, to coordinate the operation in Hubei.

Conflict Among Party Officials

The issue, as is true in many parts of China, was a conflict between younger party workers who had first been promoted in the Cultural Revolution of the latter 1960's and those older party and army veterans who had been purged in the Cultural Revolution and were subsequently rehabilitated. Several of the younger men seem to have been former workers in Wuhan, the capital of Hubei.

With the antirightist campaign earlier this year, the dissidents stepped up their attacks on the veterans, calling them "a returning legion" and "capitalist readers... to obtain our objectives, it is necessary to make the old rascals dizzy."

But after the Gang of Four was arrested in early October, the new chairman of the party, Hua Kuo-feng, was "extremely concerned about the problems of Hubei" and called a special conference in Peking to which the senior provincial leaders, all veterans, seductive young movie actress from Shanghai, Miss Chiang.

Miss Chiang, the party paper charged this week, tried to suppress Miss Yang's "heroic revolutionary deeds" and opposed the building of a mausoleum to her in her home village in Hunan in 1969. Earlier this week Peking reported that in 1974 Mao told Miss Chiang he did not want to see her any more.

Only a few months ago Mao was also being quoted as supporting the antirightist campaign aimed against veteran party bureaucrats and Miss Chiang was appearing in public as his chosen disciple.

What seems to be happening is that Mao is too valuable a source of authority for China's new leaders simply to be cast aside.

Yakov A. Malik at the U.N.

is invariably described as the man who committed a colossal diplomatic blunder by walking out of the Security Council in 1950 in protest at the presence of the Chinese Nationalists. The walkout began a six-month boycott that permitted the council, in the Russians' absence, to dispatch United Nations troops to Korea—a decision the Soviet Union would have vetoed.

It is pointed out that Mr. Malik was obviously following instructions. In addition, Russian associates now say emphatically that Moscow ordered the walkout at the express request of Peking—ironic, they admit, in light of the UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Dec. 12—Yakov A. Malik, for the last six years the Soviet Union's tough and often fiery-tempered representative here, ended his United Nations career and headed home today.

The retirement of Mr. Malik, who celebrated his 70th birthday last Monday and celebrated it with the award of the Order of Lenin, had been expected.

However, Soviet representatives now say that as a Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Malik has already started on a new role, heading three departments in the Foreign Ministry dealing with African affairs.

Unwilling to Discuss Future

"He already has begun a round of bilateral contacts with African representatives," a high-ranking Russian said. Later, if his health permits, he may undertake special missions. Mr. Malik and his wife were injured in an automobile accident on Long Island in March and he still requires medical care.

Mr. Malik was unwilling to discuss his future role before his departure this afternoon, saying it was his wish "to leave New York quietly."

The wish for an unobtrusive farewell seemed unusual for Mr. Malik, whose public image has been that of the bluff but eloquent defender of Moscow policy, a dominant figure on the United Nations scene.

Russian associates complain that when Mr. Malik's two separate tours of duty as delegate are assessed, he

Tear Gas Used to Quell West Bank Protests

TEL AVIV, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Troops used tear gas today to disperse young Arab demonstrators in Nablus, the largest town on the West Bank of Jordan River, and later imposed a curfew on the town.

It was the third time in five days that military authorities had clamped a curfew on the town after young Arabs bombarded Israeli border police with rocks, burned tires in the streets and set up roadblocks.

The troops responded with tear gas as the young people chanted anti-Israel slogans and waved the flag of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The protests were set off when an 8 percent sales tax imposed in Israel was extended to include the administered territories. The Arabs were also angered by plans to requisition Arab lands in the territory captured by Israel from Jordan in the 1967 war.

India Reportedly Censors Pro-Communist Weekly

NEW DELHI, Dec. 12 (UPI)—The Indian Government has imposed censorship on a widely read pro-Communist magazine that has criticized Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and the Indian Communist Party since the national state of emergency was declared 18 months ago, its editor said today.

Nikhil Chakravarty, of Mainstream, a weekly published from New Delhi, said he received an order Friday night asking him "to submit all matters to the censor authorities before publication."

"The order gave no reason for the action," Mr. Chakravarty said, but he added it could be the "cumulative effect of our writings in the past several weeks on national politics."

Mainstream, an ardent advocate of Sino-Soviet friendship, supports the official policies of the pro-Moscow Communist Party of India. Mr. Chakravarty is a member of the party, but his journal is not owned by it.

Thai Regime Will Allow Ex-Leaders to Return

BANGKOK, Thailand, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Thailand's new military Government has agreed to allow two of the country's former military rulers who are still in exile to return home.

Prime Minister Thanin Kraivichien said today that Field Marshal Prapas Chatsathien, a former Deputy Prime Minister, and Col. Narong Kittikachorn had the right to return because they were Thai citizens.

Marshal Prapas and Colonel Narong, together with Marshal Thanom Kittikachorn, the colonel's father, went into self-imposed exile after they were overthrown in a student-led rebellion in 1973. The three men were accused by the students of responsibility for the deaths of 72 people when policemen and soldiers opened fire during the disturbances in Bangkok that toppled their Government.

Japan's Ruling Party Keeps Majority in Upper House

TOKYO, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Japan's governing Liberal-Democratic Party has gained a one-seat majority in the upper house of Parliament with a victory in one of two by-elections held today.

The Liberal-Democrats, badly shaken by setbacks in national elections for the lower house a week ago, now hold just 11 of the upper chamber's 252 seats. The combined opposition has 120 seats. Independents hold 5 and one is vacant.

The by-election victory for the Liberal-Democratic Party, a conservative group, came at Niigata, where a former provincial governor, Junichiro Tsukada, defeated two opposition candidates. But the party lost its hold on the seat at Iyazaki, which was captured by an independent.

The Liberal-Democrats, who have held power without interruption for 21 years, won only 249 seats in the 511-member lower house in last Sunday's elections. They have a bare working majority after being joined by nine independents.

Nyszynski Tells Poles To Demand Proper Pay

WARSAW, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Stefan Cardinal Nyszynski, Poland's Roman Catholic primate, told workers today to demand more pay if they felt they were not being rewarded sufficiently for their jobs.

"Trade unions are not for politics but for economic matters," he said at a stone-throwing ceremony here. "They should fight for just wages. If you feel you are not rewarded sufficiently, you should ask for more."

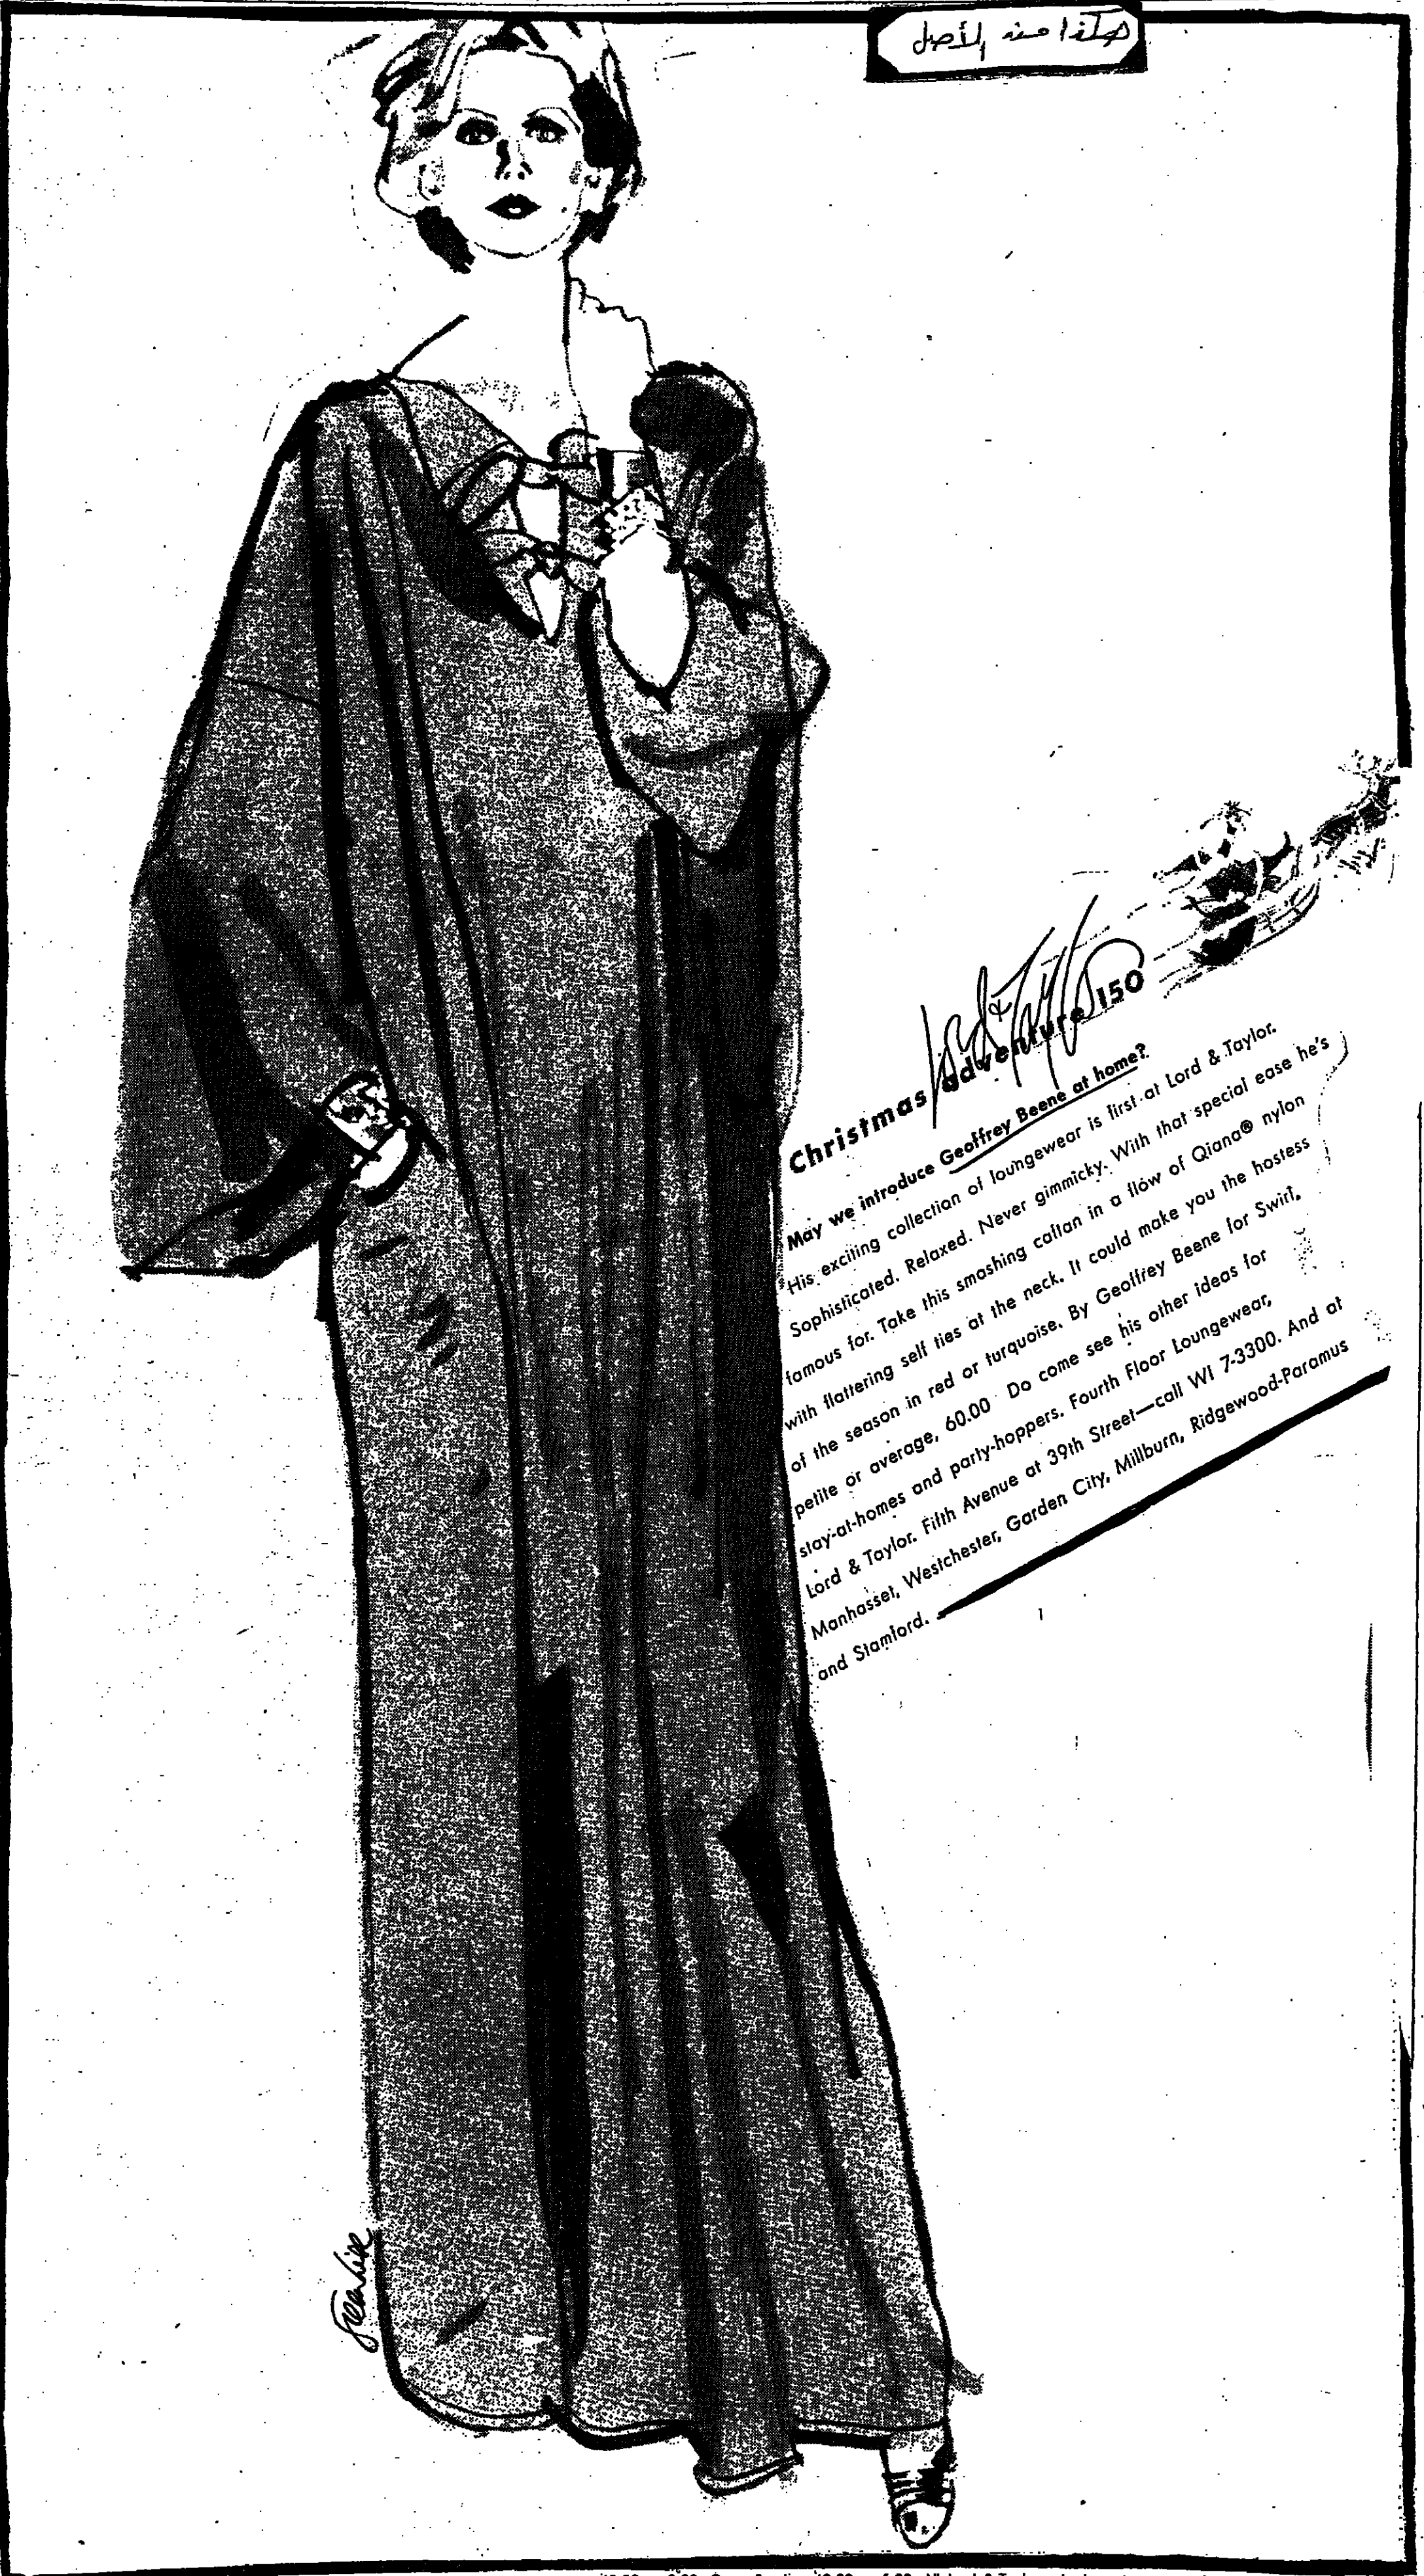

The Cardinal said that social justice meant adequate pay for a worker to support his family. If there had been social justice in Poland, he declared, the country would not have experienced the outbursts of violence in 1956, 1970 and last summer, when workers protested against higher food prices.

Jamaica, Awaiting Vote, Imposes Censorship

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Security forces imposed censorship on political advertising and public statements today in an effort to head off violence in the last days of campaigning for general elections Wednesday.

Brig. Rudolph Green, the army Chief of Staff, and Police Commissioner Basil Robinson said political literature must be submitted to the joint army-police command six hours before any publication or broadcast.

The joint statement said the measure, taken amid growing tension between the ruling People's National Party and the opposition Jamaica Labor Party, was imposed "with a view to the preservation of the peace and in order to discharge our responsibilities under the emergency regulations."

Top-Level Soviet Team Among Guests Arriving in Hanoi for First Vietnamese Party Congress in 16 Years

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, Dec. 12—Top-level delegations from some of the world's major Communist parties began arriving in Hanoi this weekend for the expected opening on Tuesday of the fourth congress of the Vietnam Workers Party—the biggest Communist spectacle in Indochina in nearly two decades.

Heading the list was the large Soviet delegation led by Mikhail A. Suslov, member of the Politburo of the Soviet Communist Party and the party's leading theoretician. The Vietnam press agency reported that a provisional member of the Politburo and at least three other Soviet party Central Committee members were included in the Soviet delegation.

Laotian Delegation Large

According to the Vietnamese agency reports, Le Duan, First Secretary of the Vietnam Workers Party, and other senior Politburo members, including Truong Chinh, Phan Van Dong and Vo Nguyen Giap, met planes throughout the day yesterday and today, reviewed troops and watched as bouquet after bouquet was presented.

Among the early arrivals was a large Laotian delegation headed by Prime Minister Kayson Phommvihan. Other delegations arrived from Rumania, Sweden, Angola and Mozambique.

Western diplomats here and in Hanoi awaited with curiosity the arrival of the Chinese delegation, which has not yet been announced but which is expected to provide a significant indication of the state of Vietnam's relations with Peking. Clearly, however, the level of the Soviet delegation seemed to most diplomatic observers to indicate that any improved relations with China had not been achieved at the expense of traditionally close ties with the Soviet Union.

Vietnam seems to have spared no efforts to make the upcoming congress a success. A detailed 40-page draft report by the Central Committee that is expected to be the centerpiece of the discussions at the session provides a blueprint for the future economic and political development of the country for the first five years—covered by a detailed plan—and over the next two decades.

Reports from Hanoi indicate that extensive attention is being paid to the unified development of the country and the need to expand the membership and composition of the Communist Party to bring in the largely excluded elements of the young and the populations of the newly acquired urban areas in the South, particularly Saigon. Apparently this has been important in the selection over the last several weeks of the 1,008 delegates from around the country who will attend the congress. By tonight all had arrived in Hanoi for the opening session.

According to the official Vietnam news agency, only about 20 percent of the delegates are party members from the pre-1945 group. Fewer than 20 percent are army members, although the report lays heavy emphasis on the role of the army to play any major role and rejects the concept of mediate demobilization.

It is unlikely that any announcement or decision by this fourth party congress could prove as dramatic as the last party congress—the one held 16 years ago. At that time, North Vietnam approved the principle of forcible reunification of the South and the overthrow of the regime of Ngo Dinh Diem.

West German Conservative Groups Agree to Continue Their Alliance for Four Years

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BERLIN, Dec. 12—West Germany's two conservative opposition parties have agreed after three weeks of fighting each other to join forces against Chancellor Helmut Schmidt after all when parliament convenes for another four-year term on Monday.

The pact, which began Nov. 19 when the Bavarian conservative leader Franz Josef Strauss led his Christian Social Union in a vote to break a 27-year parliamentary alliance with the nationwide Christian Democratic Union, led by Helmut Kohl, who tried but failed to defeat Mr. Schmidt in the Oct. 3 elections here.

Today, representatives of both parties agreed after a six-hour meeting to try again as a united parliamentary bloc for four more years.

Mr. Kohl, who is 6 feet 4 inches tall, and Mr. Strauss, a stout man who is the incarnation of the typical southern Catholic Bavarian, hardly looked pleased with each other today as they announced that they had agreed to patch over their differences.

"We believe the Government majority can only be broken if we employ all the means at our disposal," Mr. Strauss said, not even looking at Mr. Kohl.

Mr. Kohl's Christian Democrats, in four rounds of adversary negotiations with their Bavarian allies, won the most important point—that the Christian Social Union should not break out of Bavaria and run on a separate ticket in the northern parts of the country, as Mr. Strauss has long wanted to do. A wave of opposition to this in Mr. Strauss's own party broke after the vote last month.

"We are building on a foundation of common political ideals and on the assumption that there will be no competition in the various states," Mr. Kohl said pointedly in a new conference today. But on other points Mr. Kohl was forced to make important concessions.

Mr. Strauss, while claiming independence, agreed not to go nationwide—and got a pledge from Mr. Kohl that the Christian Democrats would not invade Bavaria to compete against the Strauss forces on their own ground.

But the Bavarians, in a 10-point agreement with the larger party, also got the right to vote independently in the future on major issues when they disagree with Mr. Kohl's course.

In the past, Bavaria opposed any move toward détente, including former Chancellor Willy Brandt's recognition of East Germany, even though some conservatives went along with it. In the future, the Bavarians will feel less obliged to compromise with the conservative moderates led by Mr. Kohl.

Chancellor Schmidt has a majority of only 10 in the 496-member parliament. Now the 243 opposition deputies will be united against Mr. Schmidt's coalition of 214 Social Democrats and 39 Free Democrats.

The 253 members of the coalition will vote to elect Mr. Schmidt Chancellor formally in a ceremony on Wednesday.

Excerpts From Bellow's Lecture

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 12 (AP)—Following are excerpts from the text of the Nobel lecture of Saul Bellow:

There were European writers in the 19th century who would not give up the connection of literature with the main human enterprise. The very suggestion would have shocked Tolstoy and Dostoyevsky.

But in the West a separation between great artists and the general public took place. They developed a marked contempt for the average reader and the bourgeois mass. The best of them saw clearly enough what sort of civilization Europe had produced, brilliant but unstable, vulnerable, fated to be overtaken by catastrophe, the historian Erich Auerbach tells us.

Some of these writers, he says, produced "strange and vaguely terrifying" works, or shocked the public by paradoxical and extreme opinions. Many of them took no trouble to facilitate the understanding of what they wrote—whether out of contempt for the public, the cult of their own inspiration, or a certain tragic weakness which prevented them from being at once simple and true.

In the 20th century there is still the main influence, for despite a show of radicalism and innovation our contemporaries are really very conservative. They follow their 19th-century leaders and hold to the old standard, interpreting history and society much as they were interpreted in the last century.

Back to the Center
What would writers do today if it would occur to them that literature might once again engage those "central energies"—if they were to recognize that an immense desire had arisen for a return from the periphery, for what was simple and true?

I am drawing attention to the fact that there is in the intellectual community a sizable inventory of attitudes that have become respectable—notions that few writers, even among the best, have taken the trouble to re-examine these attitudes or orthodoxies. Such attitudes only glow more powerfully in Joyce or D.H. Lawrence than in the books of lesser men. They are everywhere and no one challenges them seriously. Since the 20's, how many novelists have taken a second look at D.H. Lawrence, or argued a different view of sexual potency or the effects of industrial civilization on the instincts? Weary of Same Ideas

Literature has for nearly a century used the same stock of ideas, myths, strategies. Essay after essay, book after book, confirm the most serious thoughts—Baudelairian, Nietzschean, Marxian, psychoanalytic, etc., etc.—of these most serious essayists. What Robbe-Grillet says about character can be said also about these ideas, maintaining all the usual things about mass society, dehumanization and the rest. How weary we are of them.

How poorly they represent us. The pictures they offer no more resemble us than we resemble the reconstructed reptiles and other monsters in a museum of paleontology. We are much more limber, versatile, better articulated, there is much more to us, we all feel it.

The essence of our real condition, the complexity, the confusion, the pain of it is shown to us in glimpses, in what Proust and Tolstoy thought of as "true impressions." This essence reveals, and then conceals itself. When it goes away it leaves us again in doubt. But we never seem to lose our connection with the depths from which these glimpses come. The sense of our real powers, powers we seem to derive from the universe itself, also comes and goes. We are reluctant to talk about this because there is nothing we can prove, because our language is inadequate and because few people are willing to risk talking about it. They would have to say "there is a spirit" and that is taboo. So almost everyone is aware of it.

The value of literature lies in these intermittent "true impressions." A novel moves back and forth between the world of objects, of actions, of appearances, and that other world from which these "true impressions" come and which moves us to believe that the good we hang onto so tenaciously—in the face of evil, so obstinately—is no illusion.

BELLOW IS CRITICAL OF TODAY'S WRITERS

Bellow said, "The intelligent public is wonderfully patient with them, continues to read them and endures disappointment after disappointment, waiting to hear from art what it does not hear from theology, philosophy, social theory and what it cannot hear from pure science."

"Out of the struggle at the center has come an immense, painful longing for a broader, more flexible, fuller, more coherent, more comprehensive account of what the human beings are, who we are, and what this life is for."

"At the center humankind struggles with collective powers for its freedom, the individual struggles with dehumanization for the possession of his soul," said Mr. Bellow. "If writers do not come again into the center it will not be because the center is pre-empted. It is not. They are free to enter. If they so wish."

Mr. Bellow, a trim white-haired figure, was one of seven Americans who made a clean sweep of this year's Nobel Prizes, each amounting to about $150,000. Traditionally, each winner gives a lecture in his field during a week of parties and ceremonies in Stockholm.

Some Authors Are Praised

Late today, as a heavy snow fell, the Montreal-born novelist—the author of such books as "Dangling Man," "The Victim," "Seize the Day," "The Adventures of Augie March," "Humboldt's Gift"—spoke in the packed chamber in Stockholm's old town. Mr. Bellow's wife, Alexandra, as well as three sons, his brother and wife, his sister, his mother-in-law, two nephews and three nieces attended the lecture.

Mr. Bellow opened and closed the lecture citing one of his favorite authors, Joseph Conrad. He also praised, at various points, D.H. Lawrence, Proust, Tolstoy, Joyce and Dostoyevsky, writers "who would not give up the connection of literature with the main human enterprise."

Current writers, he indicated, have somehow severed the connection, failed to examine "attitudes or orthodoxies," have not yet coped with the wreckage and terrors of mankind.

"What is at the center now?" Mr. Bellow asked. "At the moment, neither art nor science but mankind determining, in confusion and obscurity, whether it will endure or go under. The whole species—everybody—has gotten into the act."

"At such a time it is essential to lighten ourselves, to dump encumbrances, including the encumbrances of education and all organized platitudes, to make judgments of our own, to perform acts of our own."

The Need to Simplify

"Our very vices, our mutilations, show how rich we are in thought and culture," Mr. Bellow said. "How much we know, how we even feel. The struggle that confuses us makes us want to simplify, to reconsider, to eliminate the tragic weakness which prevented writers—and readers—from being at once simple and true."

"The essence of our real condition," he said, "the complexity, the confusion, the pain of it is shown in glimpses, in what Proust and Tolstoy thought of as true impressions."

"The value of literature lies in these intermittent 'true impressions,'" Mr. Bellow said. "A novel moves back and forth between the world of objects, of actions, of appearances, and that other world from which these 'true impressions' come and which moves us to believe that the good we hang on to so tenaciously—in the face of evil, so obstinately—is no illusion."

Mr. Bellow concluded: "No one who has spent years in the writing of novels can be unaware of this. The novel can't be compared to the epic, or to the monuments of poetic drama. We can no longer raise such edifices. But it is the best we can do just now."

What the Novel Promises

"It is a sort of latter-day lean-to, a novel in which the spirit takes shelter," Mr. Bellow said. "A novel is balanced between a few true impressions and the multitude of false ones that make up most of what we call life. It tells us that for every human being there is a diversity of existences, that the single existence is itself an illusion; in part, that these many existences signify something, tend to something, fulfill something; it promises us meaning, harmony and even justice."

"What Conrad said was true, art attempts to find in the universe, in matter as well as in the facts of life, what is fundamental, enduring, essential."

Mr. Bellow, smiling, said that as an undergraduate 40 years ago, he habitually read Conrad and ignored his economic surges. "I had never had reason to regret the writer," he said. "Perhaps Conrad appealed to me because he was like an immigrant—he was an uprooted Pole sailing across seas, speaking French and writing English with extraordinary power and beauty."

"Nothing could be more natural to me, the child of immigrants who grew up in one of Chicago's immigrant neighborhoods, a Slav who was a British sea captain and knew his way around Marseilles and wrote an Oriental sort of English. But Conrad's real life had little oddity about it."

Conrad's Views Cited

"His themes were straightforward—fidelity, command, the traditions of the sea, hierarchy, the fragile rules that sailors follow when they are struck by a typhoon; Conrad believed in the strength of these fragile seeming rules, and in his art."

Mr. Bellow said: "His views on art were simply stated in the preface to 'The Nigger of the 'Narcissus.' There he said that he was an attempt to render the highest justice to the visible universe: that it try to find in the universe, in matter as well as in the facts of life, what was fundamental, enduring, essential."

Mr. Bellow said: "The writer's method of attaining the essential was different from that of the thinker or scientist. These, said Conrad, knew the world by systematic examination."

"To begin with the artist had only himself, he descended within himself and in the lonely regions to which he descended he found 'the things of his appeal.' He repeated, said Conrad, 'to that part of our being which is a gift, not an acquisition, to the capacity for delight and wonder, our sense of pity and pain, to the latent feeling of fellowship with all creation.'" million in the 16-to-25 age group unemployed.

Youth Unemployment Is Raising Fears in Europe

There has been a significant increase, furthermore, in the number of youths out of work for relatively long periods, suggesting, in the words of the Common Market's Executive Commission in Brussels, "development of a hard core of long-term unemployed people."

Richard O'Brien, chairman of the British Manpower Commission, says: "Lack of a job early in one's working life means that one misses the vital formative experience of work, the essential disciplines of working life which we take for granted. In short, there is a danger of making unemployables of our unemployed."

Though not as high as in the United States, unemployment totals in the Common Market have already reached levels unseen since the Depression of the 1930's. Unemployment in the United States is 7.1 million, or 7.5 percent of the work force, compared with 4.75 in Western Europe. In the United States 2.1 million of those unemployed are under the age of 25.

Among social forces tending to work to the disadvantage of young job seekers is the position held by union leaders on both sides of the Atlantic that their principal responsibility is protection of those on the job, not those looking for one.

Another is the attitude of corporate managers. With mounting social obligations, accepted as the insistence of governments and unions, managers have found that workers, once hired, are difficult and expensive to let go. This makes them generally wary about recruiting new workers.

Machines Are Preferred
Against the backdrop of contracting labor needs and rising labor costs, company managers now prefer, even when openings do arise, to acquire a machine if possible rather than hire men and women.

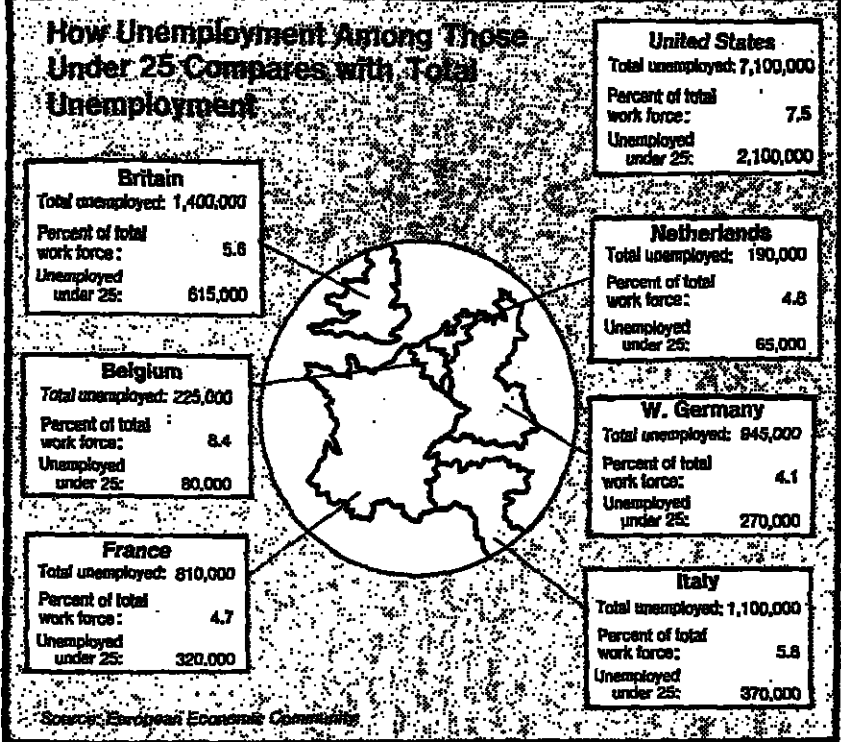

"There is too much similarity for comfort between what happened in the northern cities of the United States and what is happening here," commented the Guardian after West Indian carnival riots late last August in the Kensington borough of London.

West Indian teen-agers, many of them jobless, fought running battles with the police for two days. More than 100 people were arrested and more than 200 injured.

In Brixton, another section of London with a large West Indian population, Courtney Laws, a black leader, receives a reporter in the bare offices of the Brixton Community Neighborhood Association, declaring: "Youth unemployment has grown so much in Brixton that it is now genuinely reflected in delinquency, crime and antisocial behavior."

An Effort in Hamburg
In Hamburg Werner Jeschonowski, a Lutheran pastor, runs an unusual church rehabilitation center on the Billrothstrasse—five minutes from the Reeperbahn red light district—for motorcycle gangs of leather-jacketed youths, most without gainful employment, many with police records.

The center has twice-weekly "contact" sessions, helps the youths get jobs, and tries to divert them from the violence of the streets.

Pastor Jeschonowski, who has worked seven years in the center, warns that if youth unemployment gets much higher, "I see great dangers approaching us."

The forebodings seem to be borne out by such youths as Uwe and Nils, both 20 years old, who proudly wear swastikas and Nazi medals on their black leather jackets. Hitler was someone to admire, they contend, because he improved job conditions in Germany.

Demonstrations in the streets of Paris are also flashing warnings about the explosive character of youth unemployment. Twice in recent months marches have been called out to protest the rising number of unemployed youths.

In the spearhead of these and other demonstrations are teen-agers who chant: "The only solution is revolution!"

Though the grinning demonstrators still appear more self-conscious than defiant and though they rarely clash with the police, the words cannot entirely be dismissed in France, with its history of periodic revolutions and its worker-student uprising in the spring of 1968.

The gravity of the situation is underscored in talks with such officials as a top French central banker, who emotionally observes after a particularly bleak assessment of monetary and financial conditions: "Unemployment threatens to erode the foundations of our democratic institutions."

An employment officer in Brussels speaks of jobs for youths as "the great moral issue facing our democracies."

It becomes a question of civilization itself, says a French bank economist, Yves Lalan of the Société Générale, who examines youth unemployment in a newly published work, "La Physiologie de la France."

"A society that does not accept its children is rejecting its own future," he asserts.

Dennis Stevenson of the British National Association of Youth Clubs sounds a warning in his country: "Mass unemployment, especially among school leavers, is so destructive that the conscience and commitment of everybody, not only of officials within a government department, need to be aroused."

Based on current economic prospects, job conditions will probably get worse. All European governments have given top priority to fighting inflation. Traditionally the emphasis since World War II had been on job creation.

Policy shifts, the latest recession, demographic forces and other influences have already sharply reduced the number of jobs.

Bernard Meriaux of the French Planning Commission says that it will take until 1980 before his country has matched the job level of 1973. West Germany, Britain and Italy also have a good deal of catching up to do. But only West Germany, of major countries in Europe, has the ability at the moment to expand its economy. This is because of its relative success in fighting inflation—prices have risen by less than 4 percent over the last 12 months.

More Looking for Work
While the number of youths has been falling, the number of youths looking for work has been rising.

For the nine Common Market countries, according to a study by the Brussels Executive Commission, the number of those looking for jobs will increase by two million between 1976 and 1980, reflecting demographic factors—more youths entering the labor market while fewer older workers reach retirement age.

To keep up with the employment demand, the commission's study estimates, the number of jobs available would have to grow by 7 to 8 percent by 1980. Present prospects make such growth unlikely.

There will be better times perhaps by 1985, the study continues, as youths born in years of low birth rates, since 1968, start moving into the labor market. For today's teen-agers that is a long time to wait.

Bitterness and Alienation Grow For Unemployable, Overtrained

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Dec. 12—Unemployed or unemployable, Agim Likaj in Brussels, Klaus Ledwig in Nuremberg, Karen Patte in Paris, Gerard Jumel in the Paris suburb of Nanterre, and many, many others, don't quite know where to turn or how to react except in growing bitterness, alienation and depression.

Agim, 20 years old, dropped out of a technical training institute in Brussels last June because he had to start earning money to help support six brothers and sisters. His parents are political refugees from Albania.

Interviewed near the Brussels employment office, he said with a touch of aggressiveness: "Every place I go they tell me I'm too young." He lives on about $80 a month in public assistance.

Klaus Ledwig's parents came from Silesia, a part of prewar Germany now belonging to Poland, and settled in Bavaria about 10 years ago. Klaus started an apprenticeship with a butcher two years ago, when he was 15. It did not work out, and now he is looking for work in a bakery. He has a minor criminal record.

Karen Patte, 25, has a Paris University equivalent of a master's degree in nutrition and, when interviewed, said:

Paris cafe, was on her way to a sitting job.

"The results of education," she "are to produce disposable people."

Karen studied to do research in technology, passed all examining colors, applied to 100 entries and found nothing but offers for a clerical work for which she overqualified. So far she has had to take such jobs, preferring to sit, "I am not going to be exploited," she insists.

Gerard Jumel, 22, and newly man sitting in a crowded cafe near the Paris employment office, describes frustrations in trying to find work as an industrial designer. Characterizing himself as nervous and agitated, says it is a "crime when a society unable to provide jobs."

Daniel Depinoy, 18, looking for pen work in Brussels, says his parents have just turned him because "they didn't want anyone ing-with them who was unemployed."

Gunder Baumel, 20, who lives in Zurich, says that he was dismissed by a local tool-and-die company part of the company moved away Frankfurt. "They said the move won't affect jobs," he said. "They didn't affect jobs."

Greece and Turkey Pose Problems for Carter

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

ANKARA, Turkey, Dec. 9—A Turkish newspaper ran a headline this week saying "U.S. Should Treat Turkey Equally." The same day, a headline in a Greek daily read, "Greece Expects Balanced Policy from Washington." These headlines sum up the problem facing the United States as it tries to rebuild its relations with Greece and Turkey. As Jimmy Carter told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee American policies in the last have succeeded in alienating Greece. Accordingly, Greece has rooped out of the military wing of the Atlantic Treaty Organization has suspended the operations of important American bases here, and bulwarks of NATO's southern flank speak to each other.

American elections over, both sides say they want Washington to be balanced. In the past, the United States has wanted the United States to take their side. Any objective has been considered in both Athens and Ankara. As illustrated during the recent visit, when Mr. Carter made an in-statement endorsing the United States resolution calling for a negotiated settlement on Cyprus. Greek papers Mr. Carter as a hero, and the Turks are about the only people who the Greek press—got very nervous.

he testified last week Mr. Carter at the Greek jubilation was probably justified because he intended to be "objective" on the matter. The Greeks the statement a "cold shower" the Turks breathed a bit easier.

A Lack of Coordination

The main reason American policy has alienated both allies has been a lack of coordination between the executive and legislative branches. By 1974, Washington had a long record of supporting the military junta that ruled Greece for seven years. When the junta ousted President Karamanlis of Cyprus and provoked the Turkish invasion of the island, Greece blamed Washington—fairly or unfairly—for not having stopped the disaster.

Congress, which was already feuding with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger on this issue to force a show-down. Over Administration protests it passed a law blocking arms sales to Turkey until progress was made on a Cyprus settlement.

The embargo has been eased in recent months. But Turkey is now demanding an "embargo-proof" agreement that would provide more than $1 billion in aid over four years. That accord was introduced in Congress last summer but failed to pass, partly because Greece wanted a similar deal but refused to conclude negotiations before the Presidential elections.

Now that Mr. Kissinger's tenure is ending, the mood in the eastern Mediterranean seems slightly improved. Most Greeks have believed that the only way to exact concessions from Turkey is to exert pressure on Ankara through Washington and other allies. The Greeks still feel such pressure is useful, but they no longer seem to think that an arms embargo is the best way to apply it.

'Wounded Turkish Pride'

One Greek official recently called the embargo counterproductive on the ground that it "wounded Turkish pride" and made the Turks more rigid. Prime Minister Constantine Karamanlis has told several visitors recently that a conciliatory approach toward Turkey might be more effective.

Accordingly, Athens has agreed to open negotiations with Ankara over their conflicting claims to explore for oil in the Aegean Sea. In the past, Greece insisted that the matter be settled by the International Court of Justice.

Turkey has also tried to improve the atmosphere by agreeing to refrain from research in the disputed Aegean areas. Ankara's decision last summer to send a research vessel into these areas exacerbated tensions and spurred a new round of costly arms purchases.

Analysts do not expect quick results from these talks, mainly because Turkish elections are to be held by next October and any agreement before then would make Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel vulnerable to political attack. In the meantime, diplomats in both capitals will try to keep tensions down, do some roundwork on the issues, and hope that the elections will produce a strong government capable of making decisions.

Carter Backs Aid Packages

Mr. Carter says he supports the pending aid packages for both countries. His first task in this area will be to get the Greek deal signed and then pilot them both through Congress.

His biggest obstacle is Cyprus, where a total stalemate continues. American officials still hope that Turkey will make some good-will gesture to soften Congressional hostility, but that is highly unlikely.

A balanced policy between Greece and Turkey can only succeed if both countries show flexibility toward each other. Otherwise, the old antagonisms will rise again, both sides will start demanding total loyalty, and the Carter administration will get caught in the same pinch as its predecessor.

Ties With Vietnam and Cambodia Are Supported by Senate Leader

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Senator Mike Mansfield, Democrat of Montana, said today the United States should establish diplomatic relations with the Communist Governments of Vietnam and Cambodia.

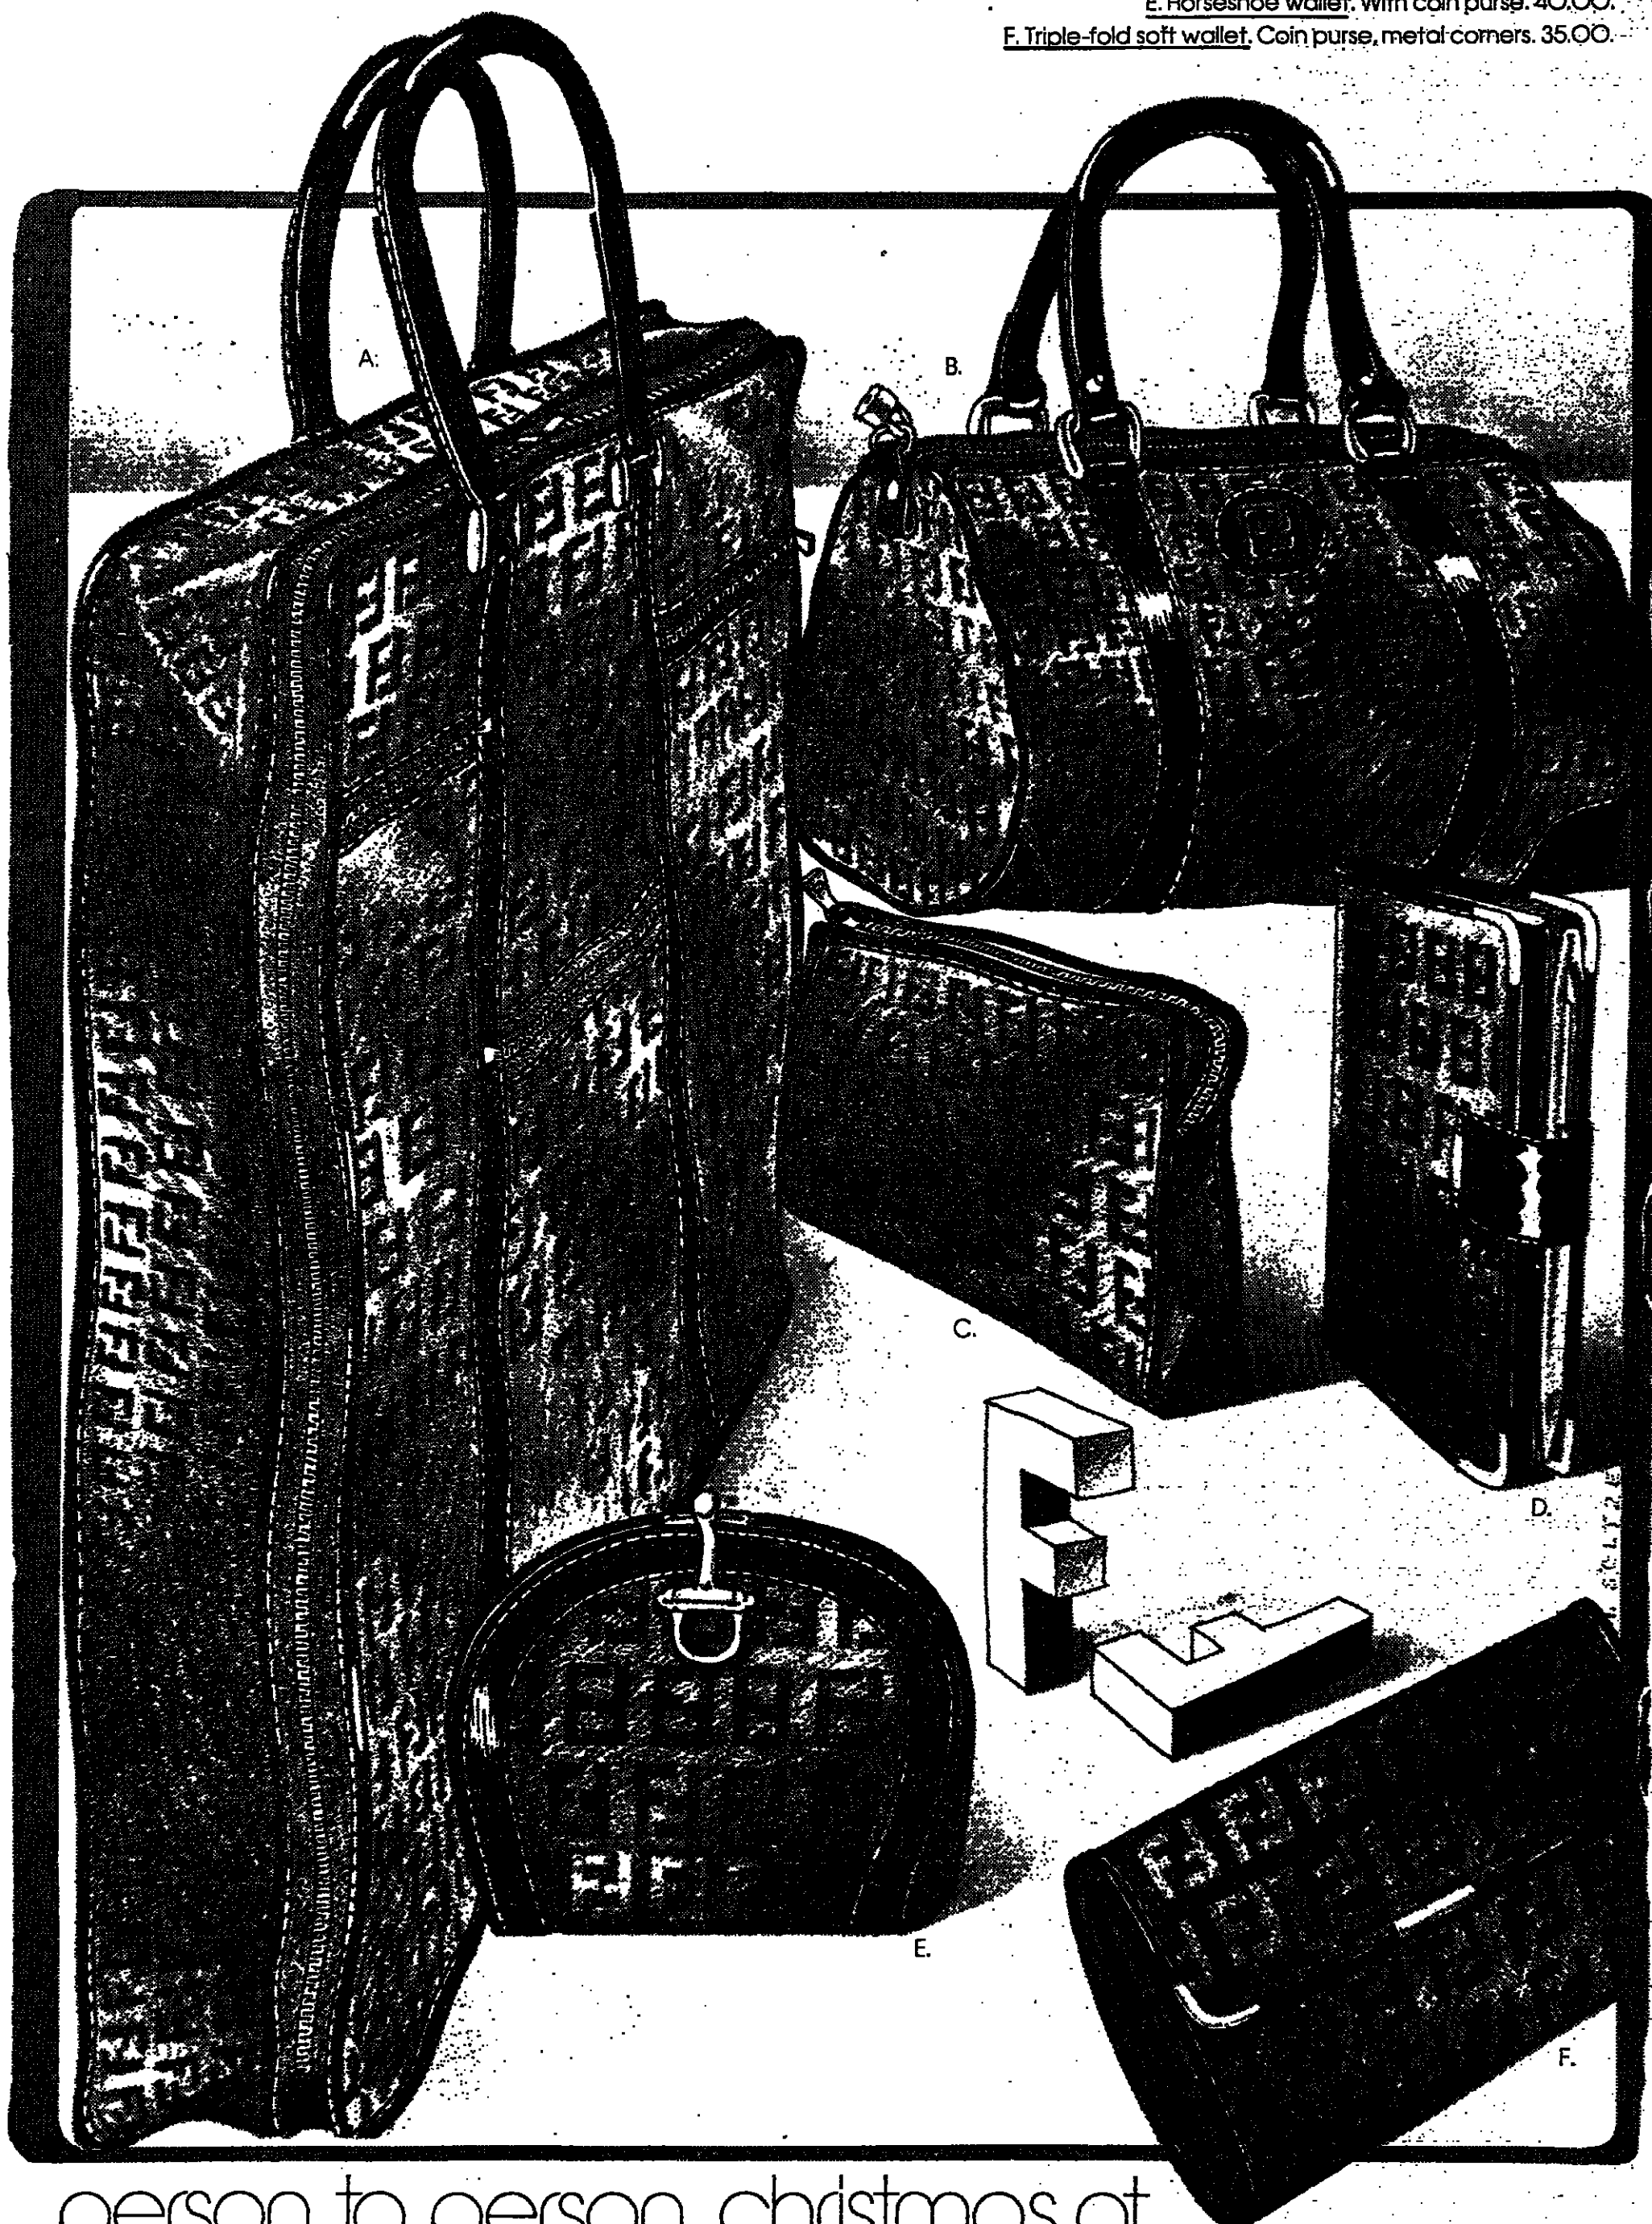

The only way to learn the fate of American servicemen missing in Southeast Asia is "to establish relations and get people in there and find out," Mr. Mansfield said in an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press." Senator Mansfield is retiring Dec. 31 after a record 16 years in the Senate Majority Leader.

Twin Italian Liners Are Sold to Iran

GENOA, Italy, Dec. 12 (AP)—The twin luxury liners Michelangelo and Raffaello, once the pride of Italy's passenger fleet, have been sold to Iran, it was announced today by officials of the state-controlled shipping line.

The sale price was not announced, but published reports put the figure at $35 million, compared with the construction cost in 1963 of $145 million.

An announcement said the liners would be transferred to Iran after being renovated to serve as floating hotels. The work is expected to take about six months.

BLACK RHODESIAN LEADER IS WELCOMED BY 200,000

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—A black Rhodesian leader, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, was greeted by more than 200,000 cheering and chanting supporters today when he arrived in the black township of Highfield from the Rhodesia conference in Geneva.

His reception at the headquarters of the United African Council was said by officials to have been even more ecstatic than the one afforded him when he returned from self-imposed exile last September.

After being cheered for more than 40 minutes, the bishop accused Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of being "fanatically glued" to the so-called Kissinger package of proposals for Rhodesia, and of employing delaying tactics in Geneva.

In a statement to reporters, he denied that he had returned to Salisbury to seek a new mandate for his delegation, and he accused other black nationalists in Geneva of attempting to impose a government on Rhodesia without free elections.

Soviet-Libyan Talks Hailed

TRIPOLI, Libya, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Libya's Revolutionary Command Council today hailed the first visit of their leader, Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi, to Moscow last week as a "significant event in the history of Arab-Soviet relationships," the Libyan press agency reported.

U.S. Jets Join in Celebration Of Kenya's Independence Day

NAIROBI, Kenya, Dec. 12 (UPI)—United States Marine Corps jets flew over the capital today to celebrate the 13th anniversary of Kenya's independence and show America's growing commitment to this East African nation.

President Jomo Kenyatta ordered the release of 10,000 prisoners, one-third of Kenya's prison population, as a good-will gesture for the independence festivities.

The Marines, based aboard a three-ship United States force berthed in the strategic port of Mombasa, made up the first American military unit to take part in a public ceremony in Kenya. It was the third time this year that the United States has signaled its growing military involvement in the former British colony.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld agreed six months ago, subject to Congressional approval, to sell Kenya 12 supersonic F-5 fighters.

The United States also sent a naval force to steam off the Indian Ocean coast last summer in a show of solidarity with Kenya when a war with neighboring Uganda threatened. In two visits to Africa this year, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger conferred at length with President Kenyatta.

O. Leaders Gather in Damascus to Discuss Unity

DAMASCUS, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—The executive committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization today began a meeting to discuss the outcome of the 1975-76 civil war and the strengthening of PLO unity.

Arafat, head of the P.L.O., attended the meeting, which was presided over by Fahoum, speaker of the Pales- National Council, the P.L.O.'s legis- lative body.

Arabian sources discounted reports that the 40-man executive committee would consider the formation of a Pales- government in exile and the possible creation of a Palestine state on the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip after Israeli withdrawal from the region. They said this would be the responsibility of the legislative body, which is expected to meet in Cairo next month.

The three guerrilla organizations that did not attend were the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the pro-Israel Arab Liberation Front and the Popular Struggle Front.

The official P.L.O. spokesman, Mohsen Abu Maizar, said that the meeting, the first since February, was called to discuss the best and quickest ways of strengthen- ing Palestinian unity.

The executive committee will consider the effect of the Lebanese war on the Palestine issue at both the Arab and inter- national levels and the situation in the occupied Arab territories, he added.

Palestinian-Syrian relations, which deteriorated last June after Syrian troops intervened in Lebanon against the Pales- tinian-Lebanese leftist alliance, will be carefully studied with the intention of improving and strengthening them, Mr. Abu Maizar said.

Polisario Reports Sahara Attacks On Moroccans and Mauritians

ALGIERS, Dec. 12 (Agence France- Presse)—Guerrillas from the former Spanish Sahara, which is now divided between Morocco and Mauritania, raided Mauritanian forces at Aguerguer last week, putting scores of Mauritanian troops out of action, the Polisario in- dependence front said today.

Two days later, Polisario forces clashed with the Mauritians at Boujerta in Mauritania, killing 33 Mauritanian soldiers and wounding several, the Algerian- backed front said.

A third attack on Dec. 8 against Moroccan defense positions at Smara in the former Spanish territory resulted in "substantial losses for the occupying forces," the statement said.

Five Moroccan soldiers were killed at Angala in a raid on a military outpost and several more wounded, it said.

Rhodesian Leaves Geneva Parley

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Dec. 12—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia left for home tonight, saying that he saw "virtually no change" in the deadlock at the conference on the future of his country despite the attention it was given in London over the weekend by high-level British and American officials.

The man who declared Rhodesia independent of Britain 11 years ago made the comment after meeting for 50 minutes with the conference's chairman, Ivor Richard of Britain. Mr. Richard had just returned from talks with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and the British Foreign Secretary, Anthony Crosland.

Just before leaving for the airport, Mr. Smith said that he had heard "very few" new British ideas at his meeting with Mr. Richard. And he added that he liked them "no more than I liked the other ideas that come from the British."

Mr. Smith's dislike of the British handling of the conference was again emphasized when he rejected as "ghostly" the suggestion that Britain provide the ministers of defense and police in Rhodesia's projected interim government.

Accuses Britain of "pandering" Mr. Smith says that the retention of those key posts in white hands, and a white veto in the interim government that would prepare for the transfer of rule to the black majority in two years, were the key elements in the so-called "Kissinger package" that brought him to the negotiating table.

The Rhodesian official accused Britain of "pandering" to the black nationalists at the conference by not centering the discussion on this package, which they reject.

From Mr. Richard's comments on his return from London it appeared that the talks there dealt largely with the "active role" that Britain has said it would be prepared to play in the interim government if all sides desired it.

But the chairman virtually eliminated the possibility that such a role could result in the sending of British troops. This was a "possibility so far at the extreme of implausibility that one ought to rule it out," he said.

Blacks Seek Interim Control The blacks want Britain to guarantee the country's legal independence under black rule. They also want control of the proposed interim government formally in their own hands.

Mr. Smith, who led the Rhodesian delegation for the first week after the conference opened on Oct. 26, said he had come back four days ago to attempt to get the talks "back on the rails." He said, "I cannot say I met with a great deal of success."

But Mr. Smith said he thought that the next few weeks might show a change for the better. The expected adjournment of the talks, he said, would give time for reflection.

Kissinger's Log Gets Final Entry: 3,600 Quiet Miles

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger returned home today, bringing to an end his unique era of airborne diplomacy.

At 1:54 this afternoon, the blue, white and silver Air Force 707 jet swooped under the heavy clouds and touched down at Andrews Air Force Base. A larger than usual group of State Department officials and reporters were there to honor the secretary whose indefatigable stamina had made him a legend at Foggy Bottom.

He chatted with some friends, spurned TV microphones and got into his mousine with his wife and drove off to watch his favorite team, the Washington Redskins, battle on television for a playoff berth against the Dallas Cowboys.

Three intensive headline-dominating arcs of shuttling around the world, to Middle East, Europe, Russia, China, in America and Africa, were over. "Podcutter," as the Secret Service identifies him in their code, had led 650,000 miles as Secretary—100 of them to 17 foreign countries—the last was today's relaxed 3,600-mile, eight-hour flight from London that had a five-day trip to Europe.

He refused to comment on the record of a dozen reporters on the flight, most were veterans of more dramatic Kissinger missions, had hoped this final leg would be memorable. Two television networks had received permission to have him aboard, and Mr. Kissinger pressed to speak on the record about triumphs and his future. But he hastily refused.

Kissinger seems to prefer to save discussion about his own often controversial record, for his memoirs after his job over to Cyrus R. Vance Jan. 20.

Kissinger preferred to the flight—has on all the other flights during the last three years—to sit informally in the front of the plane, either in the front of the plane where he has a private lounge or in the aisle in the rear where porters have to stand to hear his words above the roar of the engines.

There was an attempt at serious affairs. The Rhodesian negotiations are being coming along, he talks Mr. Carter had in London have generated movement, and two Kissinger aides return to London late in the week for consultations.

Thinking About the Russians
Russians were on everyone's mind. Discussion was made that it was in favor of Leonid I. Brezhnev to have Jimmy Carter he would not foment next year, the argument being that Russians were doing this as a favor by avoiding a confrontation.

Carter should be aware that the Russians will be watching his first moves, and the United States must quickly to warn the Russians if they meddle in the Rhodesian situation.

Middle East, Mr. Kissinger says, for settlement, if this does not happen at a Geneva conference is the solution since such a conference would give the Soviet Union a free hand to get involved in an area it has been steadily losing influence.

Mr. Kissinger was in charge after the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo—and he has no doubt he involved many policy discussions there might be simultaneous step-by-step negotiations between Israel and Syria and Syria get around the Arab problem since Israel will not talk to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The Collapse in Indochina

Mr. Kissinger's greatest sorrow probably is what happened in Indochina two years after the 1973 accords. But even he Korean accord of 1953 would have collapsed if there had been anything comparable to Vietnam and the ensuing Congressional cut of aid and support.

The Air Force leeward opened some champagne as they have at the end of every mission and poured it into plastic cups. There were some desultory toasts.

The mood was sentimental or emotional than at the conclusion of several of the Middle East trips when Mr. Kissinger was returning home with a concrete achievement after considerable effort.

More snapshots were taken than usual; reporters and staff wanted souvenirs, and a few reporters even started some of their colleagues asking Mr. Kissinger to give them his autograph.

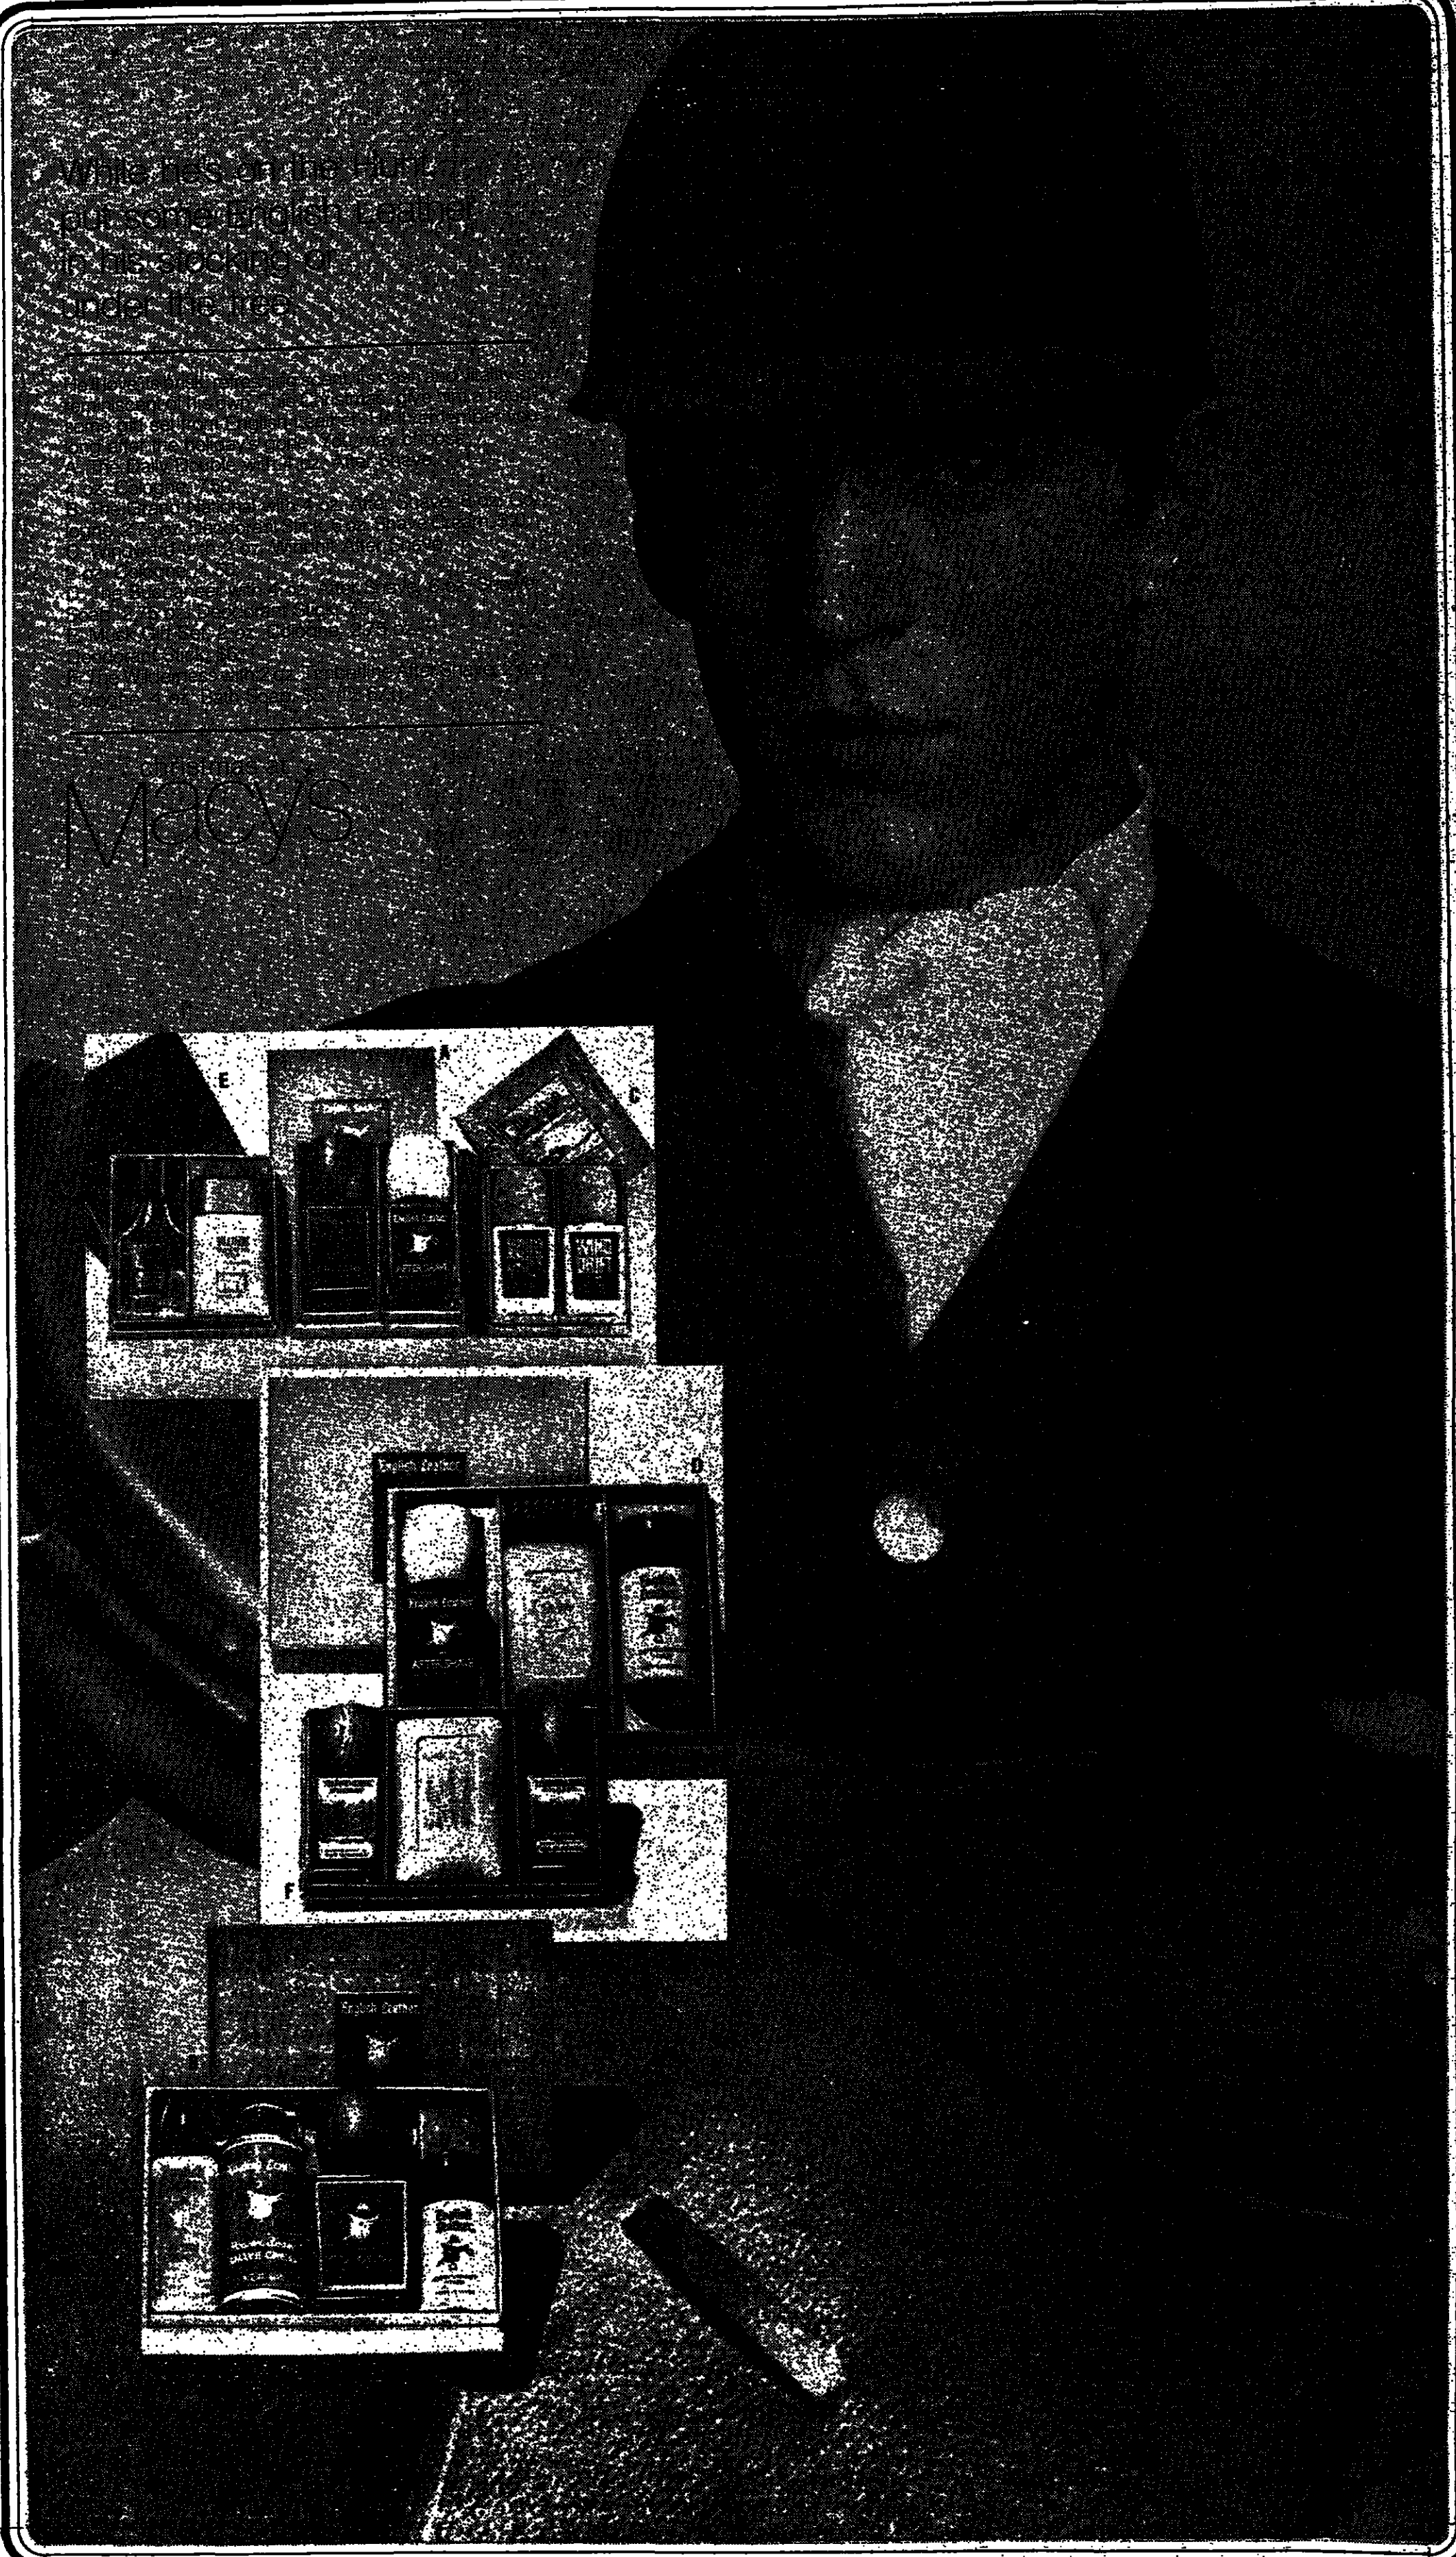

Mr. Kissinger, of course, has not retired from work. He has only told everyone that he will not leave the country in the remaining six weeks before Mr. Vance takes over. Mr. Kissinger plans to begin an intensive course of bringing Mr. Vance up to date on Wednesday when the two men will meet part of the afternoon. The two men will meet regularly thereafter.

Mr. Vance has said he would prefer not to travel so much as Mr. Kissinger and to delegate the responsibility for negotiations to subordinates as much as possible. But the consensus on the Kissinger plans was that whatever Mr. Vance's intentions, the Middle East in particular, he may find he has to fly to that region to make any headway.

Three Killed by Black Guerrillas In Attacks on Rhodesia Townships

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Black nationalist guerrillas shot and killed two black civilians and a Rhodesian soldier of mixed race in attacks on black townships Bulawayo, a security force spokesman said today. It was the 14th incident involving guerrillas in the townships since September, when a white policeman and a guerrilla were killed in a gun battle. Last month a guerrilla was shot dead by police.

Today's announcement said two guerrillas entered a bar hall in Pelemedabhe township yesterday, opened fire on drinkers and threw a grenade. Two black men were killed and six wounded. The same guerrillas earlier shot dead a white corporal in another bar hall in the Mtshembe Township.

Mexico Is Set to Enforce Ousting of 8,000 Peasants From Occupied Farmland

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Officials concerned with agrarian reform said today that they were ready to enforce a court ruling ordering 8,000 peasants off land that they had occupied in the state of Sonora.

"The Agrarian Reform Ministry will annul the resolution that affected land in the Yaqui and Mayo valleys in Sonora," Under secretary Miguel Osorio Marchán said.

The peasants' leaders said they would not give in, and would appeal. "There will be no backward step regarding the gains in Sonora and Sinaloa," said one leader, Celestino Salcedo Montón, after a meeting with Interior Minister Jesús Reyes Heróles. "The land should not be returned."

Federal Judge Carlos de Silva y Nava last week overturned the decree, by outgoing President Luis Echeverría Álvarez, expropriating the land for the peasants. Representative Victor Manzanillo Schaffer, who supports the peasants' cause, called the judge's ruling illegal because the same judge upheld a restraining order, granted before the lands were taken over.

Judge de Silva y Nava granted the restraining order on Sept. 30 because, he said, a takeover was "imminent" when the Government expropriated the land on Nov. 19, the owners of the land protested that the restraining order had been violated. In his ruling last week the judge agreed.

Mr. Manzanillo Schaffer compared the situation to that of "somebody who plans to rob a house asking for a restraining order to guarantee him immunity."

HEALTH COMPANIES ARE TERMED FRONTS

.O. Links Noprofit Concerns iving Prepaid are on Coast to Those With Earnings

By NANCY TICKS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8—Five nonprofit companies that provide prepaid care to California's Medicaid patients are, in fact, fronts for profit-making companies, according to a report of the General Accounting Office.

The report said today that the profit-making concerns obtained most of the Medicaid funds through subcontracts and then spent the money in questionable ways.

According to the report, one of the companies, Family Health Program, which received $15.5 million last year from the joint Federal-state health trust for the poor had interlocking relationships with the profit-making firms. Those concerns provided such things as a rented boat and mountain cabin for use by the doctors and directors of the company, it said.

Family Health Program Inc. paid $100 a month for a boat and $30 a month for a cabin to leisure facilities, the report said. Leisure Facilities, Inc. is completely owned by Dr. J. J. Cumbiner, who is the G.A.O. said.

A major stockholder in at least 10 of the profit-making subsidiaries of the profit parent company, of which Cumbiner is the director.

The report was commissioned by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, which has been poking into the scandal-plagued prepaid health program in California. The committee will report on the manipulation of corporations in the field today and Wednesday.

Findings in the report represent a broad disclosure of methods used by businessmen and investors to circumvent the law through business practices, engage their Medicaid programs set up for poor people.

The findings outlined are not necessarily new, but they do raise questions about the propriety, according to senators. Sen. Percy, Democrat of Georgia, and Sen. Dan Rostenkowski, Republican of Illinois, made a statement that accompanied the report that the following were noted:

Considerable Federal dollars (marked with S.W.) are reaching the intended recipients or are being diverted to the welfare entrepreneurs and used to make a mockery of the Medicaid provision in the Internal Revenue Code.

The state government and the Medicaid program, Education and the exercise of effective control would be millions of welfare dollars. At the time has come to enact laws, permitting profit-making companies to contract, under strict guidelines, health and welfare programs.

Under the Medicaid program, health plans are posed to California's Medicaid program. The Medicaid, to pay on-site fee for an individual provider of health services, including hospital, laboratory, X-ray, and nursing homes for eligible patients.

The program is patterned after private, nonprofit plans such as Kaiser Permanente in Northern California, which in the last three decades has shown that the quality can be lower cost to the provider, possible for one of the insured population healthy. The program is sometimes called a maintenance organization.

California public program, how-to-making companies that were on. The contracts need nonprofit. The conducts their money. Mr. Kistner shows. The state's program is being plagued by fraud, and the years of the program have earned Gov. Ed Brown $80 million. The program is collapsed by February.

The House Committee on Education and Labor, which is investigating arm every month, looked at five companies. The California that have millions of Medicaid prepaid health contracts. The Family Health Program Inc., the Family Health Systems Ltd., Hargrove Health Services, and Rx Health Care Inc. are the main players.

More than 100 Health Program contracts are in force. The report says that the program is not a few companies, most of which are related to each other. The state is to give Mr. Kistner Medical Systems Ltd., for whom the administration only has the $23.9 million from Medicaid sources. The remainder goes to various subsidiaries such as Pharmacy International, which gives 73 percent of the income from the 35 it gets from ten patients, each with to pay drug bills.

Pharmacy International, a company that tried to get a prepaid contract and was rejected. Consolidated Medical Systems Inc. is the state denies the business to the profit-making company, derived 41 percent of its income from Consolidated Medical Services. The companies and their affiliates all share the same directors. Harbor Health Services, another company that was investigated by the G.A.O., received $3.8 million in the fiscal year to provide care to 10,000 people. It contracts for services with companies with which it is not affiliated as those with which it is, it pays the same service. The report says that the same service, the fourth company, Hargrove Health Services Inc., gets all its income from Medicaid and disburse it through arrangements with 12 affiliates or subsidiaries. The company was the subject of a state investigation earlier this year that had political connotations because some of the investors and officials have close ties with high-level state politicians.

American Health Care Plan Inc., a nonprofit, tax-exempt company, got $2.8 million from Medicaid in 1975 to serve 8,000 patients. Some of that money went to the $715 monthly housing rental for 204 monthly care payment for the chairman of the board, Dr. Norman Brown, the report says.

Fresh Water Found Under Atlantic

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Scientists studying the Atlantic Ocean floor in preparation for oil drilling off the East Coast have discovered a zone of fresh water extending beneath the Continental Shelf much farther offshore than expected, the United States Geological Survey said recently.

They also found unusually high concentrations of unstable methane gas in two spots, which may affect location of offshore drilling platforms, officials said. John C. Hathaway was the chief scientist for the 60-day Government expedition that obtained core samples from the Atlantic floor at sites from off the Georgia coast to Georges Bank off New England.

Aimed at gathering information about geological structures and environmental factors rather than finding oil and gas, the expedition was the widest sampling of its kind ever made from the Atlantic.

Mr. Hathaway said a chief finding of the $2.9 million project "was the discovery of relatively fresh water extending beneath the Continental Shelf as much as 80 nautical miles seaward from the New Jersey coast."

Analysis of the water showed salinities, or salt content, "of less than three parts per thousand," he said. "Water of only one part per thousand salinity was found beneath the shelf more than seven nautical miles off Ocean City, Md., and Barnegat Inlet, N.J.," he added.

Mr. Hathaway said that the water was significantly less salty than seawater, which averages about 35 parts out of a thousand, and that the information "will be useful in planning development of water resources in coastal areas."

Scientists believe much of the water entered the sediments of the Continental Shelf during the ice age more than 10,000 years ago, when the sea level was hundreds of feet lower than it is today and when the shelf was exposed to rain-water.

CONSERVATIVES VOTE FOR PARTY LABELS

Gathering Agrees to Work in Established Groups— Shadow Cabinet Planned

By PAUL DELANEY

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12—In the corridors, hallways and in meetings at the Hotel here this weekend, some conservatives debated the problems and vowed to go home and "work together" for the future. They showed hands this morning at a closing session of the three-day conference called by the Conservative Caucus, a lobbying organization, the delegates decided that they wanted no party label, neither Republican, which most favor, nor Democratic—for themselves, but would work within all parties and as delegates, as well as speakers, were dubious about the meeting they arrived. But they departed with a new spirit and dedication to future work of the conservative cause.

M. Grundman, from Vincennes, Ind., a custom shoemaker specializing in shoes for the handicapped, said he had been "at first."

"I don't know what to expect. I came with questions about this conference," he said in an interview. "Now I'm convinced these people here, and I found the assurance that there are enough conservatives in the country to rebuild our Government and regain our constitutional rights. I added the slightly built, elderly bright red jacket."

Encouraged by Speeches

Grundman and other participants had been encouraged by the array of conservative speakers and panel members. These included Senator Jesse A. Helms, Republican of North Carolina; Gov. Meldrim J. Rye of New Hampshire, chairman of the caucus; Howard Phillips, the caucus director; William Rusher, publisher of National Review; Richard Viguerie, editor of The Conservative Digest, who had raised for Gov. George C. Wallace, Democrat of Alabama, and Representative Ron Paul, Republican of Texas. Phillips said the group planned to form a nonpartisan "citizens' cabinet," a shadow cabinet, of conservatives to act as a counterweight to government and to focus on issues. The delegates voted for their choices of "cabinet" members.

Helms, in his speech and in an interview, suggested such persons as Secretary William E. Simon, James L. Buckley, Conservative Party of New York, and Robert C. Anderson, ambassador to Argentina, to serve on the cabinet.

The main order of business was to discuss how to organize at the local level with the aim of replacing Democrats with conservatives.

Organizing in All Districts

Phillips, in remarks Friday, said he laid the groundwork for a nonpartisan, broadly based organization in every congressional district, an organization which, when completed in 1978, will have the strategic capacity to set the agenda for public debate, to define the issues on our terms and to surface effective leadership. Phillips said the structure of the organization now included coordinators in all 118 congressional districts and regional organizations as well as regional meetings would be held quarterly.

Delegates expressed concern about the inactivity of conservatives and the inability of the Republican Party and conservative groups to attract minorities, particularly blacks, to their ranks. An entire session was devoted to the question of establishing a newspaper in every congressional district to get the conservative view across, as well as to present to the public the words of elected officials.

There appeared to be genuine concern at the meeting did not attract a single black delegate. That fact kept coming up in informal discussions as well as in formal sessions. One elderly woman remarked to a black reporter, "I thought they said there were no blacks here." Told that she did not count since he was a newspaperman, she replied, "Well, why don't you join the party?"

Not Buying Black Vote

While frustrated over the issue, many delegates appeared to believe that blacks themselves should have to learn that the conservative position was best. In his speech, Senator Helms commented, "We are rejecting the notion of buying black votes. It is immoral and self-defeating. Any political party should try to buy black votes with promises of something for nothing."

In an interview, the Senator said he did not know what could be done about the blacks' image as being against minorities "except by those being misled." He said that they've had the greatest opportunity under the free enterprise system. "The private sector is the only real source of jobs and meaningful opportunities for minorities and inner-city areas."

Senator Helms recommended to the caucus that a broadly based public organization of Republicans be held to pick the next party chairman. He said candidates for chairman should appear at the caucus to be questioned. He added that the caucus should be held in the West or South "as the base of conservative support." Regarding the debate over which wing of the party the new chairman should lead, he said in the interview, "If the party doesn't emerge fairly quickly, the party to stand forthrightly on principle and offer a clear-cut choice for the American people. It won't need a technician, but a mortician."

Carter to Fill 2 Jobs This Week

PLAINS, Ga., Dec. 12 (AP)—President-elect Jimmy Carter will announce two and maybe three Cabinet-level nominees this week, his office said today.

The disclosure came after Mr. Carter attended services and sang Christmas hymns at the Plains Baptist Church.

"The Cabinet selection process is going well," Mr. Carter said in a statement. "The President-elect has been concentrating his search for talent in the defense and economic areas."

Mr. Carter flew to Atlanta today, the second anniversary of his announcement to seek the Presidency, to meet with Vice President-elect Walter F. Mondale and Hamilton Jordan, who is directing his talent search. On Monday he is to meet with advisers and potential Cabinet members.

Mr. Carter said last week that he expected to name his entire Cabinet by Christmas, but today's statement said that he planned to have his Cabinet-level appointments "substantially filled by Christmas."

Mr. Carter said he was "very happy with the response I've had from the people I've asked to advise me on the possible appointees."

Rex Granum, a Carter spokesman, said that Mr. Carter would have no personnel announcements Monday; but in talking with reporters after Mr. Carter left the church he held out the possibility that some announcement of Cabinet-level positions might be ready by Tuesday or Wednesday.

As today's church services were beginning, the Rev. Clemon King, a black nondenominational minister from Albany, Ga., who has attempted to integrate the all-white congregation, refused two invitations to worship there until he becomes a church member. He was invited to attend services by a deacon and also by the pastor, the Rev. Bruce Edwards.

DES FEAR CARTER IS BEING ISOLATED

relaxed in their meetings with him. He was very relaxed, almost jolly—hardly working hard but enjoying it," the description by W. Graham Claytor, the chairman of Southern Railway Company, one of the industrialists who met with Mr. Carter at Blair House yesterday.

Mr. Carter seemed very tense in the high-level transition staff meetings who met with him at Blair House yesterday.

More at Ease When Home
Mr. Carter is more at ease when he's in Georgia, he seems to be in Washington—probably he's more at home on his own. "He is and severe with the staff. Right now he's like a law student preparing for an exam—determined to do the best possible job and tonight about

Carter's own intensity, this aide had "psyched out" some of the staff made them stiff in his presence. One aide suggested, is that senior assistants like Jack H. Watson Jr., transition coordinator, and Stuart Eizenstat, chief of the policy and liaison staff, among others, have evidently left with the impression that they competition for certain White responsibilities. A source said that Mr. Carter did seem to want to relax that air of a competition or to project an easy, relaxed relationship with certain elements of his staff. "There was a hushed silence when he came into the room at the meeting," recalled one participant, "he seemed to enjoy it."

The pomp and circumstance of the victory enveloped Mr. Carter almost immediately after his election when President Ford sent him his personal jet, Air Force One, to fly him to a vacation spot on Simon's Island, Ga.

A contingent of Secret Service agents, finding him immediately expanded their protection the time he came to Washington. The first time as President-elect on Dec. 12, he was shielded from the crowds by a line of Pennsylvania Avenue from Blair House where he was

Security Atmosphere Tighter
The lines were thrown up and the Secret Service issued passes in order to be able to wait in the chill afternoon at Blair House.

At the end of the day, high-level Ford Administration officials came to call on him. He was a visiting chief of state from another country. But the schedule was one brief, informal public moment. He called for him to walk across Pennsylvania Avenue that afternoon to the White House grounds, which are only 50 yards away.

At the last minute protocol and security considerations prevailed. Mr. and Mrs. Carter were driven in a two-tone, red-colored hardtop Lincoln Continental limousine from Blair House around the rear entrance of the White House, agents riding in cars in front of and behind them. Several hundred reporters gathered and were restrained by rope.

Regular trappings of office have surrounded him on his subsequent visits to the capital.

MICRONESIA STATUS HELD CLOUDED BY SPYING

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—The chief spokesman here for the people of Micronesia said today that reports of "spying activities of the C.I.A. will in my judgment unquestionably cast a long shadow upon future status negotiations between the U.S. and my people" on the terms of independence.

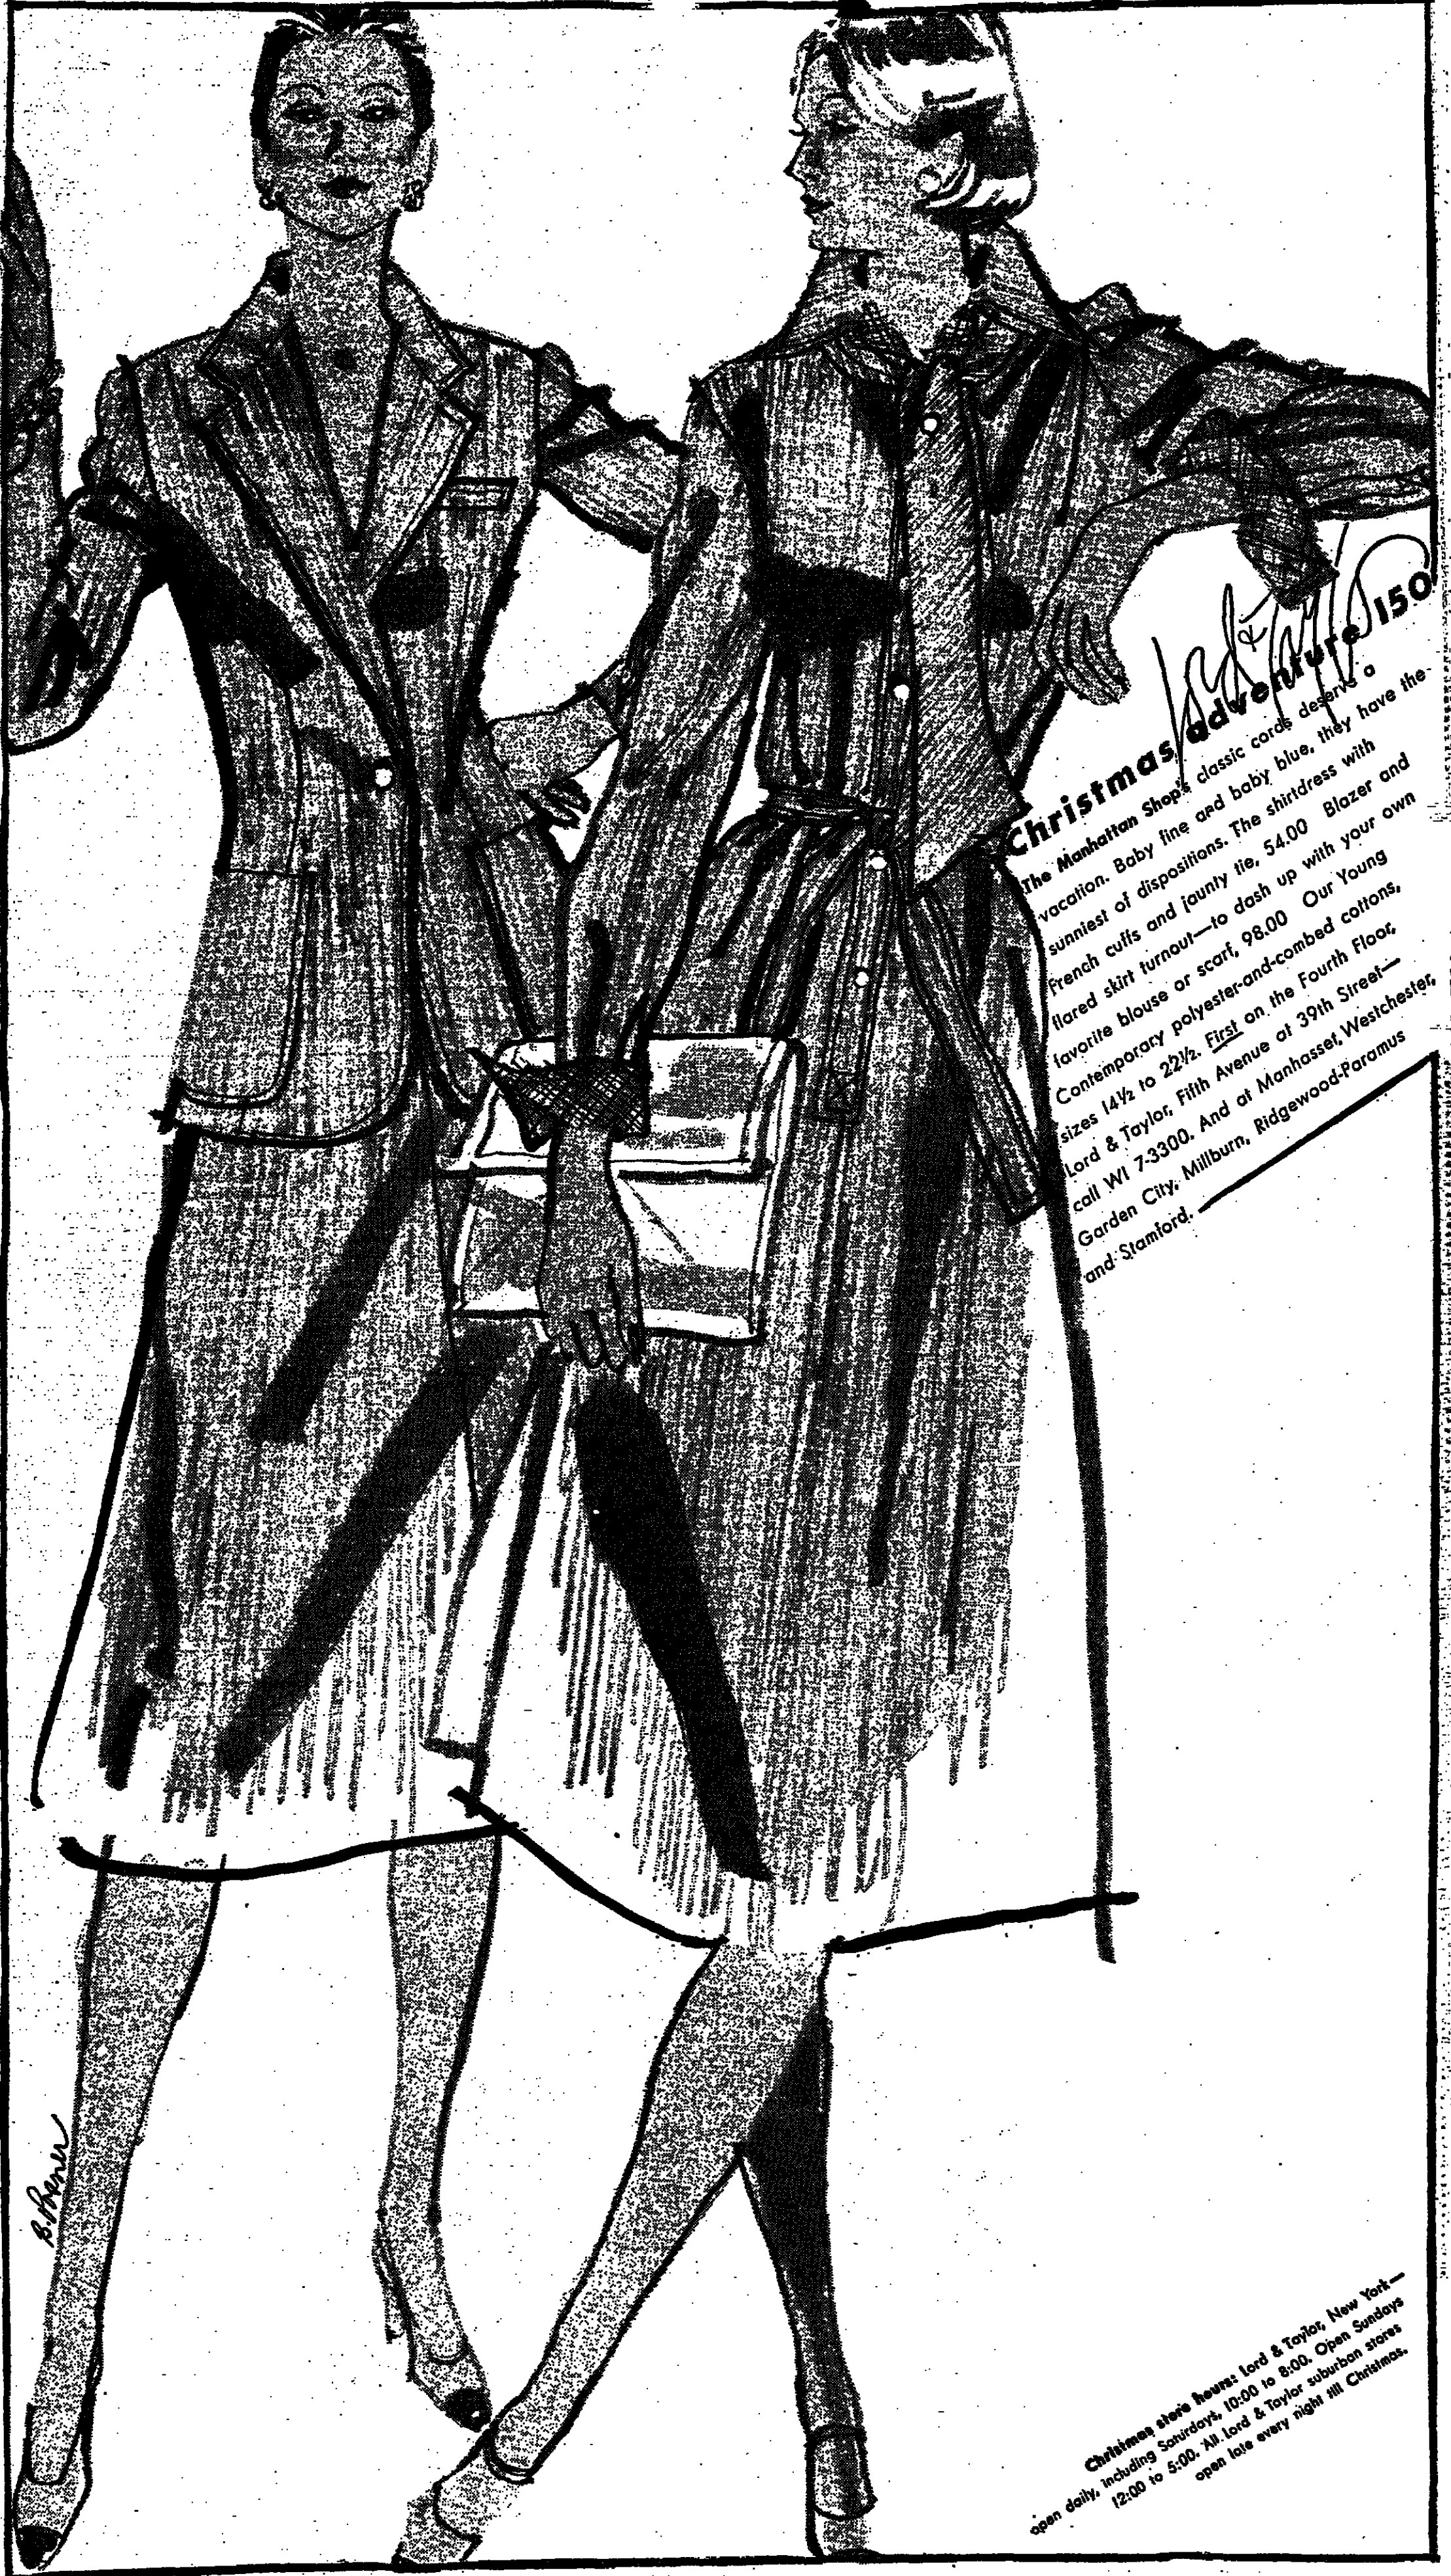

A Justice Department spokesman said today that the department was studying the legality of the surveillance by the Central Intelligence Agency in the past four years in Micronesia, a group of Pacific Islands governed by the United States under a United Nations trusteeship.

The spokesman declined to give any details of the issues. But intelligence sources said that the surveillance involved wiretaps and the bugging of rooms and listening positions as the island group sought its independence.

Neither the State Department nor the intelligence agency would comment on the surveillance today.

The Micronesian spokesman, Leo A. Palanca, who is the liaison officer for the Congress of Micronesia, called upon President Ford and the Congress "to put an immediate stop to any and all C.I.A. activities in Micronesia."

Redskins Top Politics As Capital's No. 1 Topic

By ROBERT REINHOLD
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Some say Washington is a one-game town—politics. But it is really a two-game town. The other game is football, and it is much easier to understand.

For the last several days, news of the Presidential transition has taken a back seat to that of other local passion, the Washington Redskins, who barreled their way to a playoff berth today by defeating the Dallas Cowboys, 27 to 14. The victory came after a frenetic week-end for local fans in which the team's aging and volatile quarterback, Billy Kilmer, picked up for drunken driving, producing an article that was splashed across page 1 of The Washington Post today.

At Duke Ziebert's restaurant, a major hangout for politicians and sportsmen, the scene was pandemonium after the Redskins won a dramatic last-quarter victory. Met Krupin, the manager, served as cheerleader for 30 or 50 regulars at the bar. "Everybody was going crazy," said Randy Ziebert, Duke's son. "It was unbelievably exciting."

The game capped a tumultuous cascade of news events that began the other day when Mr. Kilmer, pressed by a young and popular would-be successor, Joe Theismann, flew off the handle and denounced the press, the fans and his hard-driving coach, George Allen.

Mr. Kilmer, who led the Redskins' victory today, had declared that he was tired of serving as "whipping boy" for the press and challenged two local sportswriters to a "punch-out." The reporters demurred, preferring to punch typewriter keys. Mr. Kilmer then threatened to quit the team. Mr. Allen, in turn, placed the blame for it all on the press for printing too much "negative stuff."

By last week the affair had reached such a fever pitch that it broke out on the editorial page of The Washington Post, normally reserved for weighty matters of state. "What of the children in the audience—children who tend to make heroes out of players and coaches as well?" asked The Post. "What kind of character is being built into them as they watch their heroes whine and whimper over a sportswriter's few critical words? Are we in danger of raising a new generation of soreheads—even more sour in victory than in defeat?"

One keen sports fan, also an observer of international politics, offered this interpretation: "Allen is the Henry Kissinger of the Washington sports world. He expects the press to go along with his line. The difference is that Kissinger is subtle and subverts the press. Allen is trying to hammer them over the head."

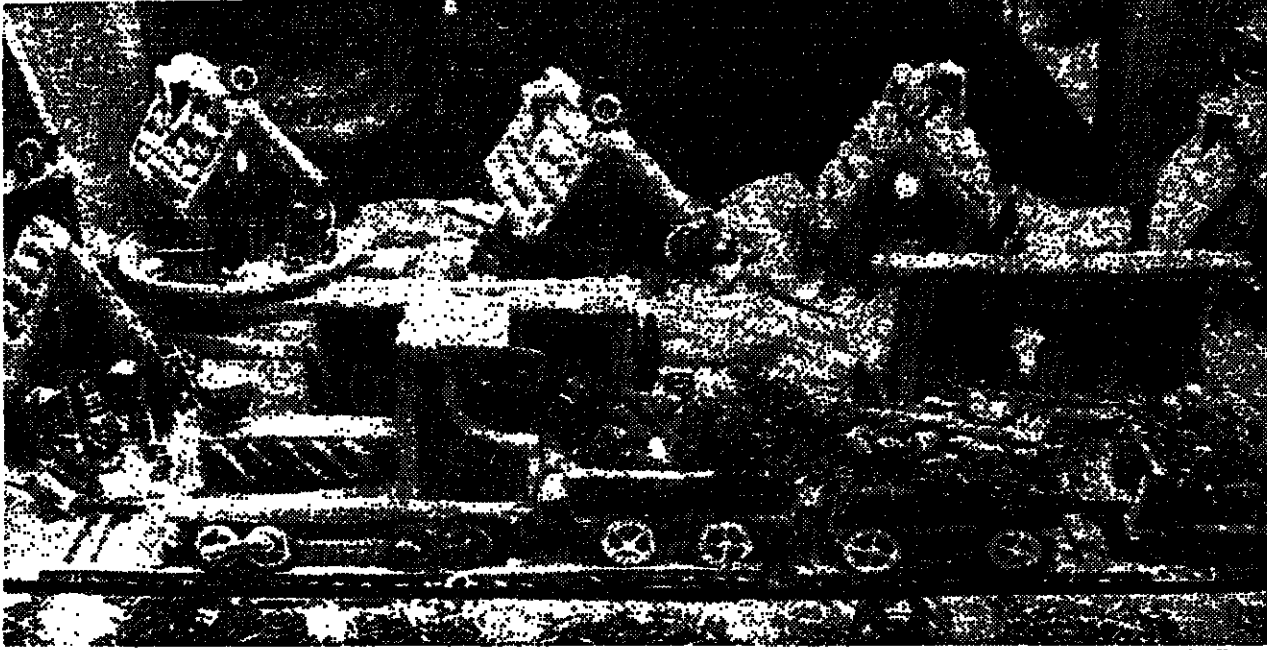

Indeed, such is the similarity between sports and government that local wags have suggested that Mr. Kissinger take over as head of the Redskins and President Ford as commissioner of baseball when they leave office next month. Unfortunately for Mr. Kissinger, at least the Redskins are already in Democratic hands, since they are headed by Edward Bennett Williams, the lawyer and Democratic major-domo.

This is the best of times, this is the worst of times in the capital. The town is alive with fresh-faced, scrubbed young people sent by the President-elect and fired with optimism about what government can accomplish despite years of cynicism and political rot. The town is also crawling with other, less attractive species: the job hunters, favor seekers, name droppers, snivlers and apple polishers who always seem to come to the surface when the political waters of Washington are churned up.

Joseph A. Califano, the Washington lawyer and confidant of President Johnson, told a reporter some months ago, "Washington will love whomever wins, especially if he's a Democrat." Mr. Califano's prophecy is already coming true.

The principal of the public school in downtown Washington where Amy Carter will attend fourth grade reports that she has been getting 10 to 15 calls a day from parents who want to send their children to the suddenly famous school, in what is now a downtown business section. Many, she says, are from the suburbs and they offer to pay more than $1,000 a year in tuition for the privilege of housing their children downtown to rub shoulders with the President's daughter.

There is no little irony in this. For years whites have been fleeing Washington's public schools, now almost all black, for the suburbs. Stevens Elementary, Amy's future school, was nearly closed recently for lack of pupils.

A Washington bakery dressed its window with gingerbread display of Plains, Ga., hometown of the President-elect

So it must make the school's principal, Lydia Williams, feel good to be able to tell the callers that enrollment is limited to neighborhood children.

Hundreds of erstwhile Southerners, meanwhile, have sprung to the defense of the new administration against what they felt was a scurrilous depiction of Southern ways by Pat O'Flaherty, the Washington Star newspaper cartoonist. It took the form of a nearly full-page cartoon headed "Fowah Mo' Years."

The cartoon showed the White House grounds littered with beer cans, old tires and a wrecked car with an open hood. There was even a rickety out-house on the side.

The rest of the cartoon offered Mr. O'Flaherty's image of the new Washington under Southern influence. Sans Souci, the fashionable French restaurant near the White House, had erected a flashing "EATS" sign over the door and added such items to the menu as "Grits du jour en fatback" and "Le Pousambilly Georgienne." And the cartoon showed a saleswoman at Bloomingdale's standing by as a matron tried on a frumpy blouse, house skirt, combat boots and a big bonnet. "Let me assure you that this is what Miss Lillian herself is wearing this season," the saleswoman said.

An avalanche of invective has landed on The Star's doorstep. "Vicious and distasteful," wrote Lawrence B. Browne of Leesburg, Va. "It takes a sick man to think such vulgar and disrespectful things about another human being," complained George and June Beadle of Bowie, Md.

"You all have gone just a mite too far," wrote Charles R. Patterson from Seabrook, Md. "Then funny pictures in that newspaper y'all made aint really so dern funny and we-us is a bit bet up about it. Looks as the yo's tryin to say we-all jes dont fit in the DC soshul whirl. Well—could be y'all's right cuz some of us country boys is get caluses on our hands—bofom. Them canases from hard work. Jes wouldn't fit in up thar."

The telephone is the subject of another fashionable game played in Washington. The idea is to get a call from either Jimmy Carter or Vice President-elect Walter F. Mondale. According to some of the recipients, Mr. Carter was on the line himself when they picked up the receiver. The purpose of the calls is to get names for top posts in the new administration. This in turn allows the recipient to become a caller and say, "I've been asked to put together some names for the Carter cabinet."

Mr. Mondale, "Fritz" to friends, makes lots of calls too, but the recipients say he is usually not on the line himself when they pick up the phone.

Washington is a cruel town. If everybody is waiting for calls from the new power wielders, hardly anybody has any interest in the lame-duck incumbents. The once daily press briefings at the White House are now given only on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Whereas 40 or so reporters used to show up to get the news from Ron Nessen, President Ford's press secretary, the briefings now attract only about two dozen, many of them second stringers. The first-string White House correspondents are down in Plains, Ga., sitting at the feet of the new leader.

Mr. Nessen's successor at the press office, Jody Powell, is settling in. He and his wife, Nan, are moving into a rented house on Foxhall Road. It is not one of the estates in that section. The house, which has an enclosed porch and two baths and rents for $700 a month, has only two distinguishing features, according to Mrs. Powell, who said, "It's less than 10 minutes from the White House and it's located in a good public school district."

Delaware Football Betting Canceled for Weekend

Special to The New York Times

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 12—Delaware canceled this weekend's state football betting game as a result of what the state's lottery director termed pressure from the news media and ridicule over the state's official point spread.

Peter M. Simmons, the director, last night canceled the Touchdown II game based on National Football League complaints, after hearing reports that betting by bookies was so heavy that the state might face a severe financial reverse if paying off the bets.

He noted published reports that the state's line on the betting card for today's game was bad. Reportedly, the state's line differed by as much as 20 and a half points a game from that of illegal betting action.

Delaware's game, a legalized sport betting similar to illegal pools, drew about $25,000 in bets in each of the two weeks.

"We understand the amount of betting this week was up, but nowhere near hundreds of thousands reported in media," Mr. Simmons said. "We were misled, but canceled rather than take a chance." No figures are available, but Mr. Simmons said that the total was up but not drastic.

Refunds will be offered to bettors starting tomorrow, Mr. Simmons said.

Suspect in Weapons Case Gets Court Date on Coal

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 12 (UPI)—A 40-year-old, foundry worker suspected of stockpiling large secret arsenal weapons was released today from jail on $15,000 bail pending his argument later this week.

Donald G. Wiggins of Ontario, Cal., charged with illegal possession of arms and explosive devices, was ordered to appear Friday in Municipal Court, Antelope Valley for arraignment.

The police, meantime, have disclosed that a barrel of deadly cyanide powder had been found among tons of military arms and explosives that had buried in homemade bunkers in desert near Lancaster, 60 miles north of Los Angeles.

"I think a lot of people are getting spooked," said a spokesman for the Bernardino County sheriff's office.

The authorities, who were turned still more hidden arms various said that the amount confiscated would equip a 200-man army.

Sheriff Peter Pittchess said, "We satisfied that it was placed by a military organization."

3 States Paying Prison Standard Wages for Work

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (UPI)—States are giving prisoners better than stamping out license plates and ironing brooms and are paying the prisoners wages, in an experiment to pare inmates more effectively for work.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration said that Connecticut, Nevada and Illinois were taking the $2 million, federally-funded program aimed at eliminating meaningless work.

"If we are going to get these men into the community, we have to have a proper work experience," Warden Carl Robinson of the Connecticut state prison at Sonoma, "is out important. But, also, it is demerit to do meaningless prison busy work."

Connecticut will spend some $488,193 grant to lease modern equipment for its print shop.

A company that provides prison services says, Minnesota inmates an hour and another state is operating programming shop in which inmates up to $10,000 a year, the agency Illinois will use its $450,000 grant to open an auto body shop, a data printing business and a graphics business and to expand a mattress shop and a furniture refinishing plant.

5 Escaped Inmates Held By South Carolina Police

GREENVILLE, S. C., Dec. 12—Five inmates of the Oaklawn Correction Center who escaped from prison overpowering three prison guards were administering a sobriety test inmate, remained at large today.

Four prisoners rushed the guard stole weapons from a gun cabinet fired into an inmate sleeping area, fleeing last night. Seven people were injured, including four inmates hit by gun pellets, but none seriously. According to a Corrections Department spokesman, the prisoner who was being held joined in the escape.

The authorities were searching a 10-county area where they thought the would remain in hopes of getting from friends or relatives.

Head of Steel Union Voted To Quit If Insurgent Wins

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 12 (AP)—Abel, president of the United Steelworkers union, has been planning to resign June, but says that he will resign if Edward Sadowski is chosen to succeed him in the union's Feb. 8 election.

Mr. Abel says a victory for Mr. Sadowski, a rank-and-file leader critic of the union's leadership, would be "of no confidence" in its own administration.

Mr. Sadowski, head of the union's Chicago district, is opposed in the election by Lloyd McBride, director of the union's St. Louis district.

Mr. Abel, though clearly opposed to Mr. Sadowski, had declined to endorse Mr. McBride until this weekend, when he said that he supported Mr. McBride's betwixt speeches and appearances.

Mr. Sadowski has been a critic of Mr. Abel and the "no agreement" Mr. Abel negotiated with steel industry.

Wave of Violent Crime Alarms Well-to-Do San Franciscans and Has Politicians Fighting

By LES LEDBETTER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 12—Waves of fear are washing over many portions of this city. Once-secure citizens say they are terrorized by the recent intrusion of violence into their formerly safe neighborhoods.

Such incidents as the seemingly senseless murder of two San Franciscans near their homes in neat residential communities, a wave of daytime violence on buses and trolleys, sniper fire from automobiles and the robbery of a former Mayor in his own home have produced widespread demands for more and tougher law enforcement.

Indeed, the sense of alarm seems to have overshadowed the reality that this city is still bustling with tourists, businessmen, shoppers and young people out for a good time.

And the crime rate is not so worrisome to the residents of poorer communities, who have always had to contend with muggings and other acts of random violence. They seem to be more concerned about other issues—the skyrocketing cost of housing, for example, and cutbacks in public services.

Each New Assault Chronicled

"There have been dozens of people killed in fires in the transient hotels down here, and that's not getting half the attention that happens when a few rich whites get robbed," said a young artist who lives in the predominantly black and Latin Mission District.

But the alarm is real in the well-to-do neighborhoods inhabited by the establishment that runs the city.

Local newspapers and television stations chronicle each new assault. Civic groups and politicians condemn the year-old administration of Mayor George Moscone as soft on criminals.

"Things are very, very serious," said John J. Barbagelata, who ran against Mayor Moscone in 1975 and has emerged as something of a leader among the 11 members of the Board of Supervisors in the drive for tougher law enforcement.

"The Mayor and the police chief like to say it's only a greater public perception," said Mr. Barbagelata. "I think it's just the opposite; that fewer crimes are being reported."

"There is a failure to lead by the Mayor, and the supervisors are thus required to provide the leadership the city needs," said Quentin L. Kopp, another supervisor, when public employees struck last spring.

Mentioned as Mayoral Candidates

Both Mr. Kopp and Mr. Barbagelata have been mentioned as possible mayoral candidates three years hence, and there is some suspicion in the Moscone administration that their criticism is based at least in part on political considerations.

But the Mayor and his associates including the District Attorney and sheriff who were elected with him, and the police chief he appointed, contend that much of the uproar over crime is a result of their decision to alter the relationship between local law enforcement and the new and changing population of the city.

Police Chief Charles Gain, who has had to fight entrenched officers in his own department as well as conservative businessmen and politicians who oppose his somewhat radical views on law enforcement, says the deaths and violence are tragic.

But he adds that the slayings "did not increase the already high crime rate or send the trend higher."

According to Chief Gain, this year's

40 or more "random shootings"—incidents in which there was no previous connection between the victim and the perpetrator and no warning before the act—do not exceed the number of random shootings last year and the year before.

Statistics Show Number Up

Chief Gain said that through November major crimes here had increased 20 percent over last year. But more significant in terms of the present violence were statistics from the Federal Bureau of Investigation on the 1975 murder rate in San Francisco.

These showed that while San Francisco ranked 11th among major cities in the United States in its murder rate, it was among the highest in terms of random killings or "stranger homicides," which made up 43 percent of all murders. The statistics also showed that the city had one of the lowest rates in terms of murders solved, 59 percent.

The politics of the moment reflect the growing power of community groups, which was enhanced in November when San Franciscans voted to end the city-wide election of supervisors in favor of district elections.

The move toward precinct politics, which is to become effective next year, has been hailed by community groups as a boon to the poor and minorities and has been denounced by many in the establishment, including most of the supervisors.

"The city will certainly become more parochial with this shift of power; each candidate will have to carve out a specific constituency rather than represent an appeal to all the city," said John De Luca, a Deputy Mayor in the recent administration of Joseph L. Alioto.

This change of power and the honest if sometimes political arguments between the Moscone administration and the supervisors have helped fuel the crisis feeling here.

"How can we fight crime unless the leaders get together?" said Welliver, a representative of the Emporium, one of the area's major department store chains, said at a recent meeting that degenerated into a shouting match between Mayor Moscone and Supervisor Barbagelata.

There have been many shouting matches at similar meetings and at supervisor's hearings, with the argument often centering on whether the administration favors the legalization of prostitution and whether police cars should be changed from black and white to blue and white.

All sides seem to agree on the basic causes of the random violence and crime.

"This place is a haven for people operating on one cylinder, who blow when the pressure is too much," said Supervisor Barbagelata. "But we've also got to fix up the neighborhoods; we've got to find jobs for the minorities; we've got to open up the unions and lower costs so that apprentices can work; and we've got to eliminate the red tape in other policies that discourage small and large businesses here."

"This is Golden California," said Chief Gain, "and this is the most open city in the most open society in California, and there is no denying that violence is on the increase here as it is in growing communities elsewhere in the area."

Then he added, "Newark, Washington, D.C., Gary, Ind., have all suffered from the results of great influxes that destroyed their homogeneous nature and brought increased crime."

But if they agree on causes, the two groups differ greatly as to solutions.

Mr. Barbagelata has got the city to authorize a new program using $4.9 million in Federal funds and $362,000 in city funds to add 200 officers and 200 civilians to the police force. "We have to arrest and convict the criminals," he said.

Police Chief Questions Manpower

Chief Gain said that while he was glad to have the additional manpower and would saturate problem areas in an effort to restore public confidence, he questioned whether any lasting results would occur.

"Based on experience elsewhere, the additional police and additional arrests will neither result in allaying citizen fear nor in decreasing the crime rate," he said.

Supervisor Barbagelata says he has not given up on San Francisco because "we've got the funds and all we need is the leadership to bring the city back around again."

Chief Gain, meanwhile, worries aloud whether the panic and political battling over crime "isn't going to do more harm to our own self-image and to our tourist trade than the crime itself."

Detroit Protecting Old Homes by Presale Inspections

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Dec. 12—Eva M. McKellar's spacious home in this city's exclusive Palmer Woods area is not what most people would consider uninhabitable. But when she recently agreed to sell it for more than $62,000, the city sent an inspector who declared that her home did not meet local standards for livability.

Under Detroit's presale inspection law, adopted six months ago and the subject of considerable controversy in real estate circles, Mrs. McKellar had a choice: she could correct the defects cited by the city inspector or persuade the buyer to accept the property "as is." Though the buyer was eager to close the deal, he risked facing a more stringent inspection later and an order to make repairs.

Rather than risk trouble, Mrs. McKellar, a bit surprised but not overly annoyed, decided to make the necessary improvements. The city inspector wanted her to replace several pieces of ceiling tile in the basement that had been removed in a recent remodeling, move an electric outlet from a closet and into the open area of a small bedroom—two outlets are required in each bedroom—and "point up" a few places on the masonry steps of the back porch.

"I think it's a good law," she said, though she spent several hundred dollars making the repairs and the closing of the sale was delayed at least 30 days. "I've seen a lot of property that's needed a lot more done," she said.

Situation in Detroit Unusual

Many small towns throughout the nation have pre-sale inspection laws of various types, but Detroit is the first major city with a large stock of one-family and two-family homes to adopt such laws, according to the National Association of Realtors, the Chicago-based association of real estate brokers. Minneapolis is the only other large city with a law of the same nature, according to the trade group.

With more than 300,000 single-family homes, perhaps the largest stock in the nation, Detroit's efforts here have attracted attention from several other big cities concerned about maintaining the quality of their housing stock. New York City has such a law, though some metropolitan area suburbs do.

The Detroit law, which applies to all sales of single-family and duplex homes, is an outgrowth of this city's experience with a huge housing program begun by the Federal Government after the riots of the late nineteen sixties.

Federal housing officials guaranteed millions of dollars worth of home mortgages, but much of the housing was of poor quality and many of the buyers were not prepared for the responsibility of home ownership or were unable to afford it.

By the early 1970's, much of this housing had been foreclosed by the Government and was abandoned. Some of it was subsequently bought by speculative investors for resale to unsuspecting buyers who would again abandon it as uninhabitable.

"We wanted to reverse the onslaught of abandonment," said Craigston C. Lederer, director of Detroit's Building and Safety Engineering Department, which administers the program. "People know now that when they buy a house in Detroit they at least get a house that meets livability standards."

Cost of Inspection $32

The basic presale inspection covers building safety and the condition of the heating, electric and plumbing systems. Its cost, $32, is paid by the seller. The city maintains that the presale inspection is not as detailed as a normal building-code inspection and is not meant as a substitute for one.

The real estate industry is divided over the law, characterizing it as one based on good intentions but administered in such a manner that it has become a nuisance. There are those who contend that the regulation make some homes unsalable.

Charles I. Cross, the real estate broker handling Mrs. McKellar's home, complained of losing sales because of the delays inherent in the presale inspection law.

"The law has an advantage for purchaser and seller, but when you're over the $40,000 price range the condition is generally borne in mind," said Mr. Cross. "I expect that it will have a long-term benefit for the total housing market in the city, but meantime we are suffering. It puts a cramp on our time of closing and has been dealing a death blow to our cash flow."

The strong enforcement of the new law appears to have had no marked impact upon the market here, according to Richard T. Schwandt, executive vice president of the United Northwestern Realty Association, one of the largest multiple listing agencies in the state. Describing the program as a modified urban renewal program, one that improves what exists instead of razing and replacing it, he said the new law could have some long-term benefits for the city.

Academicians at Meeting in Capital Voice Resentment Over Federal Regulation of Higher Education

By GENE L. MAEROFF
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—The simmering resentment in the academic community over the growth of Federal regulation of higher education boiled over at a two-day conference at George Washington University that ended yesterday.

Academicians were strongly critical of college professors and administrators for the costs in money, time and energy of having to comply with an ever-growing list of Government requirements. There were many suggestions, though, that the Federal role represented an infringement of academic freedom.

One approach is "reverse discrimination." One panelist, Dr. Kenneth S. Tollett, spurred a caustic exchange of opinions by his remarks on this issue.

The concrete examples of the effect of Federal intervention revolved around financial matters. Institutions of higher education have had to add staff members and spend greater sums of money to deal with the increasing number of forms that must be filled out to comply with regulations that are similar to those imposed on business and industry.

Rules covering occupational safety, welfare, retirement programs, equality of opportunity and other aspects of employment relations have been involved.

William J. McGill, Columbia's president. A recent study by the American Council on Education found that the average institution of higher education spent just under 1 percent of its total budget to meet the paperwork requirements of the Federal Government.

Some of these things are true," said Mr. Bork, a former law professor at Yale University. Martin Gerry, the director of the Office for Civil Rights of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, maintained that his agency had a necessary concern in protecting the rights of women and members of minorities, people "who have been classically excluded from universities."

The conference was entitled "The University and the State: The Proper Role of Government in Higher Education." However, many of the discussions repeatedly gravitated toward one particular aspect of Federal intervention, affirmative action.

The sponsoring organization, the University Centers for Rational Alternatives, has helped lead the opposition to the Government's system of targets and goals for adding more women, blacks and other minority members to the faculties of higher educational institutions.

Members of the audience objecting to Dr. Tollett's comments charged that he unfairly raised the specter of racism. Beyond the question of affirmative action, there was hardly any specific mention by the critics of how they thought the Federal Government was infringing on academic freedom.

Institutions of higher education have had to add staff members and spend greater sums of money to deal with the increasing number of forms that must be filled out to comply with regulations that are similar to those imposed on business and industry.

In return, the nation's colleges and universities are receiving the benefit of $15 billion a year in Federal assistance, according to Chester E. Finn, Jr., a researcher for the Brookings Institution, who spoke at the conference.

(wheelbases under 100 inches)

Check the facts:

- 1. Low price. Ford's Pinto Pony starts out with a low base sticker price of just $3,099 (excluding title, taxes and destination charges).
- 2. High resale value. Pinto consistently has high resale value. In fact, at retail prices, an average two-, three- or four-year-old base Pinto sold for more than a similar Chevy Vega, even though Vega is usually sticker-priced higher than a new Pinto. (Pinto was $66 lower than Vega in 1973, $22 higher in 1974, and $17 lower in 1975.) Compare Pinto's resale prices to Vega's.
- 3. Excellent mileage and performance. Pinto still has excellent mileage ratings. Even though Pinto's powerful cast-iron engine—proven in millions of driver miles—gives it the power for climbing steep hills, passing quickly and entering highways confidently.
- 4. Scheduled maintenance reduced $353. Over the past four years, more than 75% of the scheduled maintenance requirements on Pinto's 4-cylinder engine have been reduced or eliminated. That's an estimated reduction in costs of $353. So today, the base Pinto's average scheduled service is estimated at only $186 for the first 50,000 miles.

Study Shows Employees of 24 Cities Get Pay Comparable With Indu

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (AP)—Employees of the nation's 24 biggest cities are paid salaries comparable with those in private industry, a recent Government study says, with Government clerical workers earning more and skilled trades workers less than the private industry average.

No single city is the consistent pay leader in the wide range of employee categories, but Los Angeles, Chicago and Milwaukee were near the top in two functions.

"Lowest pay was generally reported for Indianapolis, Jacksonville, Fla., and New Orleans," according to the study by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The bureau reported that "pay tended to be highest in Northeastern and Western cities and lowest in the South."

The study, involving wages paid between August 1974 and August 1975, compared city and private industry salaries in cities with more than 500,000 population. A bureau analyst, Richard Keller, said that the study had not dealt with such factors as working conditions or job security.

"Job security sometimes makes city work more attractive than private employment," said Mr. Keller. "Economic changes usually affect private industry before the impact hits the city Government."

Clerical workers in 14 cities were drawing higher pay than their counterparts in local private industry, the study showed, with municipal workers in Columbus, Ohio; Milwaukee, Los Angeles and Philadelphia taking home at least 15 percent more.

Houston exemplified one of the dangers of generalizing—the city's senior stenographers made 14 percent less than the local private industry average, while accounting clerks earned 22 percent more.

Skilled city workers, including painters, carpenters and electricians, earned less than in private industry in 14 cities. In Atlanta, Indianapolis, Jacksonville, Kansas City, New Orleans and St. Louis, pay levels were more than 10 percent lower, said the study.

Construction Rate Wages

In seven cities where wages were based on construction rates, city skilled maintenance workers made substantially more than their private industry counterparts. This was true in Chicago, Cleveland, Memphis, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, New York and San Francisco, the report said. In comparing the cities to one another,

"none emerged as the pay leader in clerical, skilled maintenance, public utility, sanitation and janitorial" said the study.

"Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Philadelphia and San Francisco topped the list, but Cleveland led in skill maintenance pay by a large margin."

"New York, Los Angeles and Chicago had the highest pay for police workers (mainly police officers and fire fighters); Chicago for workers, and Milwaukee and Chicago for janitorial workers," said the report.

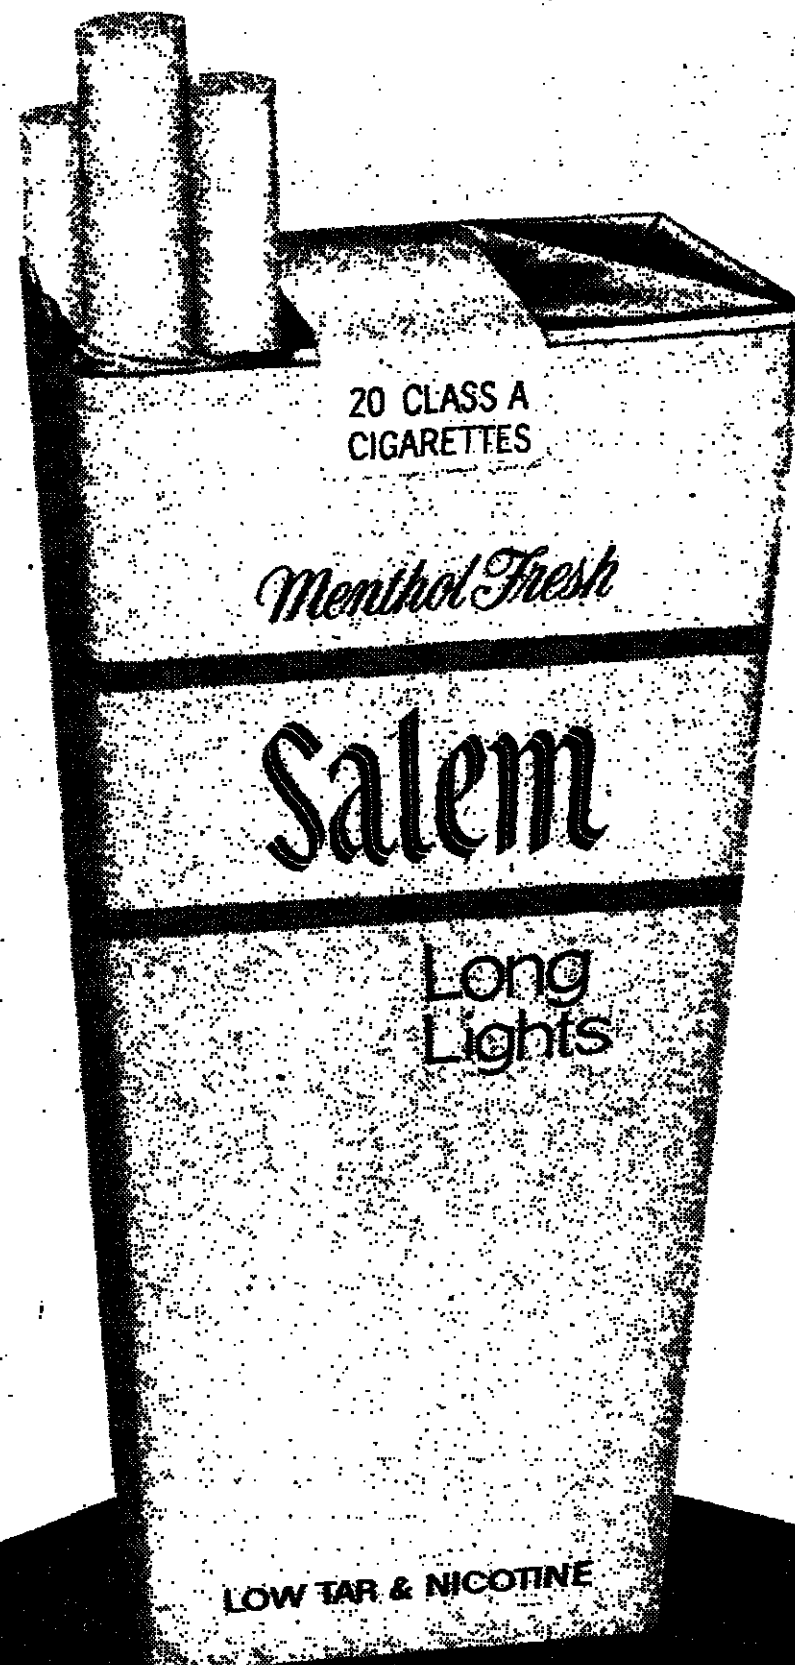

Differences reflect factors such as local labor markets, needs and policies of the cities, tax structure, financial ability and the power of local bargaining units, the report said.

Sister of Farouk Is Killed; Husband Is Held

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 12 (AP)—Fathia Ghali, sister of Egypt's late King Farouk, has been shot to death in her apartment and her estranged husband has been booked for investigation of murder, the police said.

The husband, Riad Ghali, 56 years old, fired a bullet into his head after Mrs. Ghali was shot, officers said. He remained in stable condition today at the U.C.L.A. Medical Center.

The body of the 45-year-old former Princess, whose love for Mr. Ghali caused royalty to drop her, was found Friday by her son, Rafik. The police said she had been shot in the head. Sources said the husband, from whom Mrs. Ghali separated in 1965, was upset over the family's dire financial condition.

Mrs. Ghali shared her West Los Angeles apartment with her mother, 81-year-old Nazli Fuad, once the Queen of Egypt.

In September, Mrs. Ghali's jewels were taken into a Los Angeles bankruptcy court. A lawyer said Mrs. Ghali hoped to raise $500,000 from them. With a high bid at the courtroom sale of only $180,000, the receiver was granted permission to attempt a private sale of the jewels.

The former Princess and Mr. Ghali were married in 1950. King Farouk stripped his sister and their mother of their titles because the Moslem ruler disapproved of the marriage to Mr. Ghali, a diplomat who was both a Christian and a communist.

The couple lived in luxury for many years from assets they brought to the United States. Farouk was overthrown in a 1952 coup. He died in exile 13 years later.

New York to Tokyo. (A 6,754 mile leg.)
 This flight was the first, and is still, the only non-stop flight between New York and Tokyo. And it leaves every day at noon.

New York to New Zealand and Australia. (Non-stop from San Francisco to Auckland, a 6,754 mile leg.)
 From New York you're only one stop away from Auckland. And you can continue on to Sydney. Returning from Sydney, you're still only one stop away from New York. (Non-stop from Sydney to San Francisco, a 7,400 mile leg.)

New York to Bahrain. (A 6,601 mile leg.)

You can fly non-stop to Bahrain every Monday. And return non-stop every Wednesday.

New York to Rio. (A modest 4,787 mile leg.)
 Not only do we fly to Rio every day, but on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, we do something no other airline does: fly you there on a 747 SP.

On all of our SP flights we provide non-stop in-flight service as well.

In first class you can (and should) make a reservation for a seat at a table in our upper-deck dining room. For lunch and dinner you can choose from 4 entrees in first class and from 3 entrees in economy. There's a choice of movies for both classes (with a nominal charge of $2.50 per headset in economy).

If you don't want to take in a movie, you can take a walk. On our wide-body 747 SPs you won't feel glued to your seat.

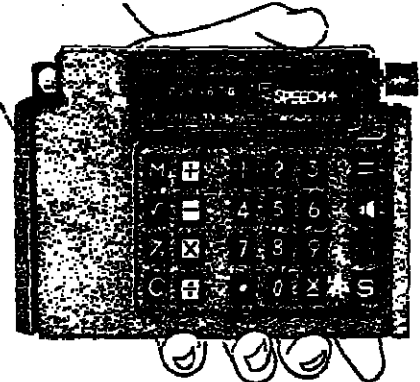

You might even find that when it comes to flying long distances, our competition hasn't got a leg to stand on.

PAN AM.

Handicapped Campaign for Rights To Mobility, Jobs and Education

DETROIT, Dec. 12 (UPI)—"You have to understand that you are a cripple. You have a certain station in life, and you cannot rise above it."

Eric Gentile, paralyzed from the waist down in a motorcycle accident 12 years ago, will never forget those words. They were uttered by an angry nurse who wanted him to follow hospital rules.

At 22, Mr. Gentile had to accept the fact that he would spend the rest of his life in a wheelchair. As an experienced draftsman, he found it extremely difficult to get a job, and when he did find one, he got half the salary able-bodied employees got.

He could no longer ride a bus, enter most buildings or use public restrooms. "I think those words have been engraved in stone in my memory," he said, recalling the nurse's outburst in 1965.

Since then, Mr. Gentile has been in the forefront of a civil rights movement of militant handicapped. They are demanding—not asking—for the right to mobility, employment and education.

New Civil Rights Law
 Mr. Gentile, now a building designer at Michigan State University, set up a political action group, helped to write the state's new handicapped civil rights law and published newsletters to help the handicapped to organize.

The lobbying efforts of Mr. Gentile and other handicapped persons in organizations like the National Association of the Physically Handicapped and the Paralyzed Veterans of America led to legislation in more than 20 states. The new laws gave the handicapped the same civil rights guarantees enjoyed by blacks, women and other minorities.

In 1973, marches and letter-writing campaigns helped to pressure Congress into enacting a new Federal law prohibiting discrimination against the handicapped in employment and education.

Since then, organizations of handicapped in dozens of cities have filed suit against mass transportation agencies operating buses inaccessible to people in wheelchairs.

The movement is relatively new. Before this decade, few handicapped organizations existed, and those that did were timid, according to the militants.

Many of the militants are like Judy Taylor, head of M.S.U.'s handicapped student program and a quadriplegic. She began working for black civil rights in the 1960's and switched to organizing the handicapped when she realized that a person in a wheelchair faced the same kind of discrimination that blacks did.

Others, like Mike DeSany, a paraplegic who is head of the Michigan Paralyzed Veterans, are Vietnam veterans.

"These are a new breed of handicapped people," he said. "There are a lot of Vietnam veterans who feel they have given their best to their country and don't like the situation they are left in. They are not used to being rolled over by society. They don't have the traditional attitude of the handicapped of accepting [discrimination] and staying at home behind closed doors."

Federal Study Hints Ratio Of Heroin Use in Detroit Is Highest in the Country

DETROIT, Dec. 12 (AP)—A Federal study indicates that Detroit leads the nation in proportion of heroin users, with 30,000, or about one in every 41 residents, having a habit.

Other studies indicate there may be more than 50,000 heroin users in the city with habit costs ranging from $5 to $1,500 a week, and that Detroit leads the nation in heroin-related deaths.

City health officials say the studies suggest that Detroit's heroin use has grown at least tenfold since 1971, when 3,000 cases were listed.

One of the latest reports comes from Dr. Robert L. DuPont, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuses, who reported last week that there are 30,000 addicts in Detroit and 40,000 in the metropolitan area.

Under an institute study, hospital emergency rooms in 23 cities were asked to keep records on whether a history of heroin use was either mentioned by patients or found by doctors in their treatments.

The study found that Detroit led the nation, with San Francisco close behind. On a per capita basis, Detroit had more than three times the hospital mentions of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles or Washington.

The Federal study showed there were more heroin addict deaths in Detroit last year than in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland and Atlanta combined.

The report said one reason that New York, with its vast population, had fewer such deaths, was because the New York addict population had shifted to the legally available heroin substitute, methadone.

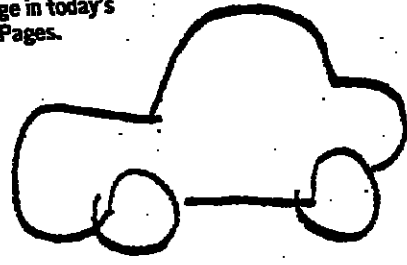

Simon Says Congress Calls Him Too Often

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Treasury Secretary William E. Simon says Congress demands too many time-consuming appearances by Cabinet members, especially when they are coping with a crisis.

"When you're testifying three days a week on the average, sometimes four, then how in the world can one be expected to run a department of 120,000 people?" Mr. Simon asked in an interview. "I think when I'm called by every single committee on the [Capitol] Hill just to have a show-and-tell, that's silly."

Town of 50 That Doesn't Have TV Isn't Certain That's a Bad Thing

ESSEX, Calif., Dec. 12 (AP)—Nobody in Essex watches television. Nobody can. It's one of the very few communities left in America that cannot receive TV signals.

The signals cannot penetrate the mountainous Mojave Desert to the antennas that a few Essex residents have put up in hopes of someday watching a football game or movie.

Some of the 17 ranchers and park rangers who live in the nearby hills can pull in stations broadcasting from Phoenix, Ariz., 270 miles to the southeast. But the 50 persons clustered around the post office, gas station and elementary school here get nothing. Even the closest stations—in Las Vegas, 110 miles away—are blocked by hills.

Different Views of Situation
The Denver Research Institute says that one million United States households receive inadequate service on only one channel. Essex, with no service at all, is lumped into that figure along with isolated communities without TV in several other states.

How do the desert dwellers of Essex, one of the larger communities with no television, feel about their situation?

"It's really boring here," says 13-year-old Toni Smith, who rides a bus 80 miles roundtrip daily to attend junior high school in Needles, which also is the nearest community with a doctor and supermarket.

"Television is an excuse for not doing something about loneliness," says Phil Acosta, 19, a highway maintenance worker. "Without TV I go out and make friends."

"I think you have politer kids here," says Margaret Stevens, 57, who was raised in New York and whose husband, Al, is the school teacher. "Everyone knows everyone. Kids are forced to talk with their parents. You just can't sit in front of the TV and stare."

Many of the older people spend free time roaming the brush country in four-wheel-drive jeeps, a substitute for TV entertainment. The youngsters, instead of basing their games on television programs, play at truck driver, a reflection of the traffic on the interstate highway that passes six miles away.

"They pretend the trucks have C.B. radios," says Dennis Smith, 11. "They might say, 'I'm stranded up on the grade, come up and help me.'"

Ironically, perhaps, just about everyone in Essex owns a TV set. Most moved here in recent years and bought with them the TV sets they had watched living other lives in other towns and cities.

Riot Police Quell Clash in Jail

VENTURA, Calif., Dec. 12 (UPI)—Riot police were called in last night to quell a disturbance at the Ventura County Jail that broke out when a prisoner tried to take the food of another prisoner and a fight involving some 15 inmates developed, the Sheriff's Department reported today. The fight led to a five-hour rampage in which the inmates, all in a cellblock for prisoners not yet sentenced, broke windows, sinks and toilets and tore up plumbing. A team of 10 riot policemen quelled the disturbance about 9 P.M.

DONOR TO NEEDIEST CITES BROTHERHOOD

A Theme of 'Concern for Others' Marks a Contribution of $25

Man's obligation to other human beings was a theme touched upon by a donor yesterday to the 65th annual appeal of the New York Times Neediest Cases fund.

El Fogel of Long Island City sent the fund a check for $25 and in his letter wrote: "If we are not for our brother in need, then how can we include ourselves in the brotherhood of man?"

Previously acknowledged $440,804.39
Total $442,919.02

Just could not let the year draw to a close without this practice. "Please use it in memory of all the wonderful people I have known. May it give a little pleasure to some person who has not been as lucky as I have been. My best wishes for the continued success of the fund."

HOW TO AID THE FUND

Checks should be made payable to The New York Times Neediest Cases Fund and sent to P.O. Box 5183, Church Street Station, New York, N.Y. 10249 or to these agencies:

COMMUNITY SERVICE SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, 115 East 22d Street, New York, N.Y. 10010.

FEDERATION OF JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES OF NEW YORK, 130 East 59th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

CATHOLIC CHARITIES OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF NEW YORK, 1011 First Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022.

FEDERATION OF PROTESTANT WELFARE AGENCIES, 361 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10010.

STATEN ISLAND FAMILY SERVICE, 25 Victory Boulevard, Staten Island, N.Y. 10301.

No agents or solicitors are authorized to seek contributions for The New York Times Neediest Cases Fund. Contributions to the fund are deductible on Federal, state and city income taxes. To delay may mean to forget.

of someone, anonymously or in the name of the donor. Gifts and bequests are deductible for income-tax and estate-tax purposes.

There is no soliciting of any kind other than in the pages of The New York Times. The late Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of The Times, founded the annual appeal in 1912. Administrative expenses are paid by the newspaper.

Mrs. Madeleine M. Low of Manhattan gave a check for $100 that marked the 65th year she had made a contribution "in memory of my nephew, J.W.H., who passed away Dec. 12, 1917."

Another longtime donor, Joseph Levy, who has been a supporter of the fund for almost half a century, is a resident of Upper Manhattan and not of the Bronx as had been listed.

Retirement money.

Now. Start with as little as $100. You'll get East River's highest interest rate plus special tax advantages. And retire richer than you ever dreamed possible.

Plan I - You Have No Pension Plan.

If there's no pension plan where you work, you can open an IRA account at East River and deposit, as a tax-savings deduction, 15% of your annual income (maximum $1,500 each person, or $3,000 for an eligible, employed couple). Both the money you contribute and the high annual interest earned are tax-free until retirement, when your tax bracket is likely to be lower.

Earn Maximum Interest With Minimum Deposit.

Start building your retirement money account immediately. Open your IRA account now with as little as $100 and begin earning East River's annual yield of 8.17% which is 7.75% a year compounded daily. And you can make deposits of $100 or more anytime during the year up to the maximum of $1,500 for each person. To qualify for this high rate, the money is required to be left on deposit in a savings certificate for a minimum of 6 years - maximum of 7 years. Other savings plans with shorter maturities are also available. However, interest rates and minimum deposit requirements vary with these alternative plans.

Special Combination IRA with Savings Bank Life Insurance Retirement Income Policy.

East River also has a special plan that combines Savings Bank Life Insurance with a high interest savings plan. This plan maximizes estate benefits in the event of your death or provides for annuity payments in your retirement years, starting as early as age 60, guaranteed for life! The insurance feature guarantees completion of that portion of the plan. Important disability benefits are available. Full details are available at any East River branch or call Alice Lyons at 374-4594.

East River Interest is What Makes You Rich.

As shown in the table below, it's East River's high interest that changes modest savings into accumulated wealth. At $1,500 a year for 40 years, your contribution will amount to $60,000. But East River adds over $380,000 in interest, for a retirement total of more than $440,000 provided principal and interest remain in your IRA account until that time.

Recently Retired Or Changed Jobs.

If you're changing jobs or retiring and receiving a distribution from a qualified pension or profit sharing plan, you can "roll over" these proceeds within 60 days into an East River IRA plan and avoid paying any current income taxes on the distribution.

Plan II - You Are Self-Employed.

East River has a special Self-Employed Money retirement plan (Keogh) with newly increased tax benefits that allows you to deposit up to 15% of annual income (maximum $7,500 per year). Call or mail coupon for details.

Note: If you already have money maturing in a present HR 10 retirement plan that has not displayed the performance you anticipated, check our available high-yielding, guaranteed savings plans and compare.

Use the coupon to obtain more details or call (212) 374-4561. Or visit or call any of East River's 12 offices listed below for assistance in setting up your Individual Retirement or Keogh account now!

How East River's IRA Helps You To Retire Richer At Age 65.

50	7,500	2,052	9,552	3,536

Table amounts are based on maximum $1,500 annual contributions and on a constant interest rate of 7.25% compounded daily for an annual return of 8.17% available on our 6 Year Savings Certificates with a stated minimum deposit of $1,000 and a federal tax bracket of 30%. The funds must be left on deposit for that time to obtain this rate. Available future rates may be more or less than present rates, depending on economic conditions and government regulations. Premiums withdrawal on Savings Certificate funds can be made only with the consent of the Bank. FDIC regulations provide that the rate of interest on the account withdrawn be reduced to the passbook rate at the time of withdrawal from the date of deposit and 90 days interest be forfeited. Interest rate may be withdrawn without FDIC penalty. There is, however, a tax liability and penalty imposed by the IRS if withdrawals are made from this plan before age 59½. That must, however, be withdrawn from the account by age 70½, and no further contributions can be made thereafter. NOTE: These amounts do not include your Social Security benefits.

Chess: Larsen Uses 'Tame' Vienna To Produce a Solid Point

By ROBERT BYRNE

If Bent Larsen can squeeze blood out of the Vienna Game, should we all follow his lead?

Such an opening has long been a rarity in tournament practice because, supposedly, it makes very few demands on the defender. White cannot obtain high-powered, quick-developing threats that force Black to find precise replies as in the favored Ruy Lopez, for example.

Yet Larsen has resorted to this opening on some of the most critical occasions. In the Biel Interzonal Tournament, the Danish grandmaster found himself in the thick of the fight in round 17 for one of the qualifying places for the world championship candidates matches. He had just dropped two games in a row, to Tigran Petrosian and myself, and it was urgent for him to get back on the winning track.

What did he pick to get a vital boost? None other than the Vienna Game, producing a point at the expense of the Yugoslav grandmaster Aleksandar Matanovic.

No Need for High Risks

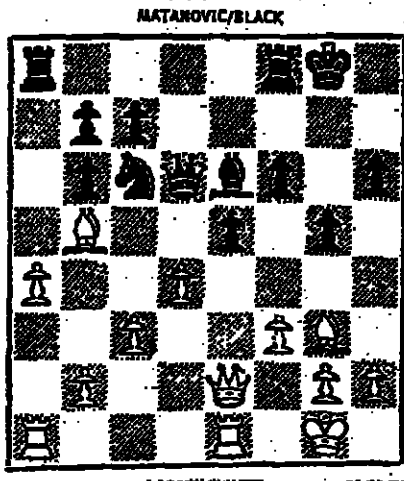

It may be possible for Black to take his chances with a wild and unclear 3... Nc6: 4 Q-R5, N-Q3; 5 B-N3, N-B3; 6 N-N5, P-KN3; 7 Q-B3, P-B4; 8 Q-Q5, Q-K2; 9 NcPch, K-Q1; 10 NKR, P-N3; 11 P-Q3, B-QN2; 12 P-QR4, P-B5; 13 Q-B3, N-Q5; 14 Q-N4, B-KR3; 15 N-R3, N3-B4; 16 N-N5, BxN; 17 PxB, P-B6, but there is no need for this risky stuff unless Black is desperate to win. Matanovic's 3... N-B3 was safe and sufficient.

Forcing the white QB to commit himself by 5... P-KR3; 6 B-R4 was reasonable but then I would have proceeded with 6... N-QR4, eliminating the white KB. After 6... P-Q3; 7 N-R4, B-N3; 8 NcR, R-PN2, it was the black KB that left the board while Larsen saw to it with his usual but effective 9 P-KB3 that his QB could not be exchanged (as, for example, after 9 N-K2, P-KN4; 10 B-N3, N-KR4).

Pressure Is Increased

Matanovic's 10... P-KN4, lifting the annoying pin, weakened the black kingside, but he tried to compensate for that by taking the initiative in the center with 11... P-Q4. However, when the center was opened by 12 PxP NcP, the KP became vulnerable and the black king could not achieve a perfectly secure berth by castling on either wing.

Larsen could already have won a pawn by 20 BxN, PxB; 21 QxP, but he did not want to allow Matanovic any drawing chances stemming from the resulting bishops of opposite color. Instead, he increased the pressure by 20 B-N3, obtaining great positional advantage after 21 P-Q4.

Still avoiding gain of material, Larsen removed all minor pieces at moves 25-27, creating a winning heavy-piece position. Once again he could have plucked the hapless KP by 28 RxBP, but he preferred to torture Matanovic by relentless positional play.

Possibly Matanovic could have put up a better defense with 35... Q-N4. After his 35... Q-B4ch, his queen was soon driven out of play by 36 P-QN4, Q-N3.

Larsen's 39 RxBP (finally) persuaded Matanovic to resign since there was no viable defense against the threat of 40 QxPch and 41 R-K5mate.

Bridge: 17 Teams Survive First Stage Of Grand Nationals Knockouts

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The start of knockout play in the Grand National Team Championships at the New York Hilton Hotel Saturday reduced 69 teams to 17 but produced no major upsets. However, there were two minor upsets and one narrow escape, and in all three cases, by coincidence, the margin of victory was 3 international match points.

In one upset, the ninth-seeded quartet of August Boehm, Mike Engel, Ray Brown and Mike Kassay lost to Don Warner, Anatole Kondratieff, Richard Weissman, Lynn Kesselman and Sherry Felicis. In another, Larry Blum, Norman Neiger, Jerry Rowley, Sam Marsh and John Milner, seeded 12th, lost to John Racz, Harold Beck, Victor Melman, Victor Markowicz and Kent Vandewater.

The seventh-seeded group consisting of two families, John, Bill and Jill Roberts and Victor and Jacqui Mitchell, barely survived against Bob and Judith Tripp, Bob Haven and Joe Foster.

In one of the most interesting deals of the day, one of the top-ranked teams gained heavily, bringing home a doubled game contract in both rooms.

West Opens With One Club
In both rooms, West opened the bidding with one club. In one case, Edgar Kaplan ventured a superlight take-out double with the North hand, impressed by his ideal distribution for this purpose. East's redouble was a surprise to Henry Bethe, sitting South: The fourth player in such circumstances usually considers himself fortunate to hold two or three high-card points, and he was looking at 10.

There were two possible explanations: one player might have taken a psychic action, overbidding his values by about 10 points, but in that case his vulnerable partner would not be the villain; or, the true explanation, the other players all had minimum or sub-minimum values for their calls.

In any event, a direct jump to four spades was indicated, putting pressure on the opposition. It was too late for East-West to discover that they held a nine-card club fit, and East doubled on general principles—not a sound course as it turned out, for the contract was unbeatable.

Bethe had to exercise some care, however, after the opening lead of the diamond ten, a probable singleton. If he had finessed in trumps, he would have been defeated by two tricks as the cards lie. Instead, he led to the spade ace at the second trick, and was rewarded when the king fell.

Bethe was able to draw trumps for 10 tricks and a score of 790 points. If the king had not fallen, he would have played another trump, hoping for an even break and resigning himself to defeat if either defender had begun with K-x-x, for they could then play a third round to cut down ruffs.

West Marked With Singleton
As West was marked with a singleton diamond, he was not likely to have a singleton spade, and if East held a small singleton, the contract was unmakeable with any play.

In the replay, North passed the opening and South bid one spade over a one-heart response. This gave Tom Smith, as West, an opportunity to rebid two clubs and he eventually reached five clubs doubled. North cashed the spade ace followed by the diamond ace, after which West had no trouble in maneuvering to collect two spade ruffs.

North could have beaten the contract by shifting to a trump, not easy to find at the table, or to a low heart, which would be nobody's choice.

In the Company of Giants

By JOHN LEONARD

PICASSO'S MASK. By André Malraux. Translated and Annotated by June Guicharnaud with Jacques Gaucher. Illustrated, 275 pages. Holt, Rinehart and Winston, $10.

It's as if André Malraux had left a tape-recorder running while he walked around the Museum Without Walls inside his own skull. The transcript is this headchess of a book, back and forth in the time of his life and in the time of art, opening and shutting closets—inside this one, the Little Man from the Cyclades with his violin-shaped idol, inside that one a black Aztec death's-head—with constant interruptions by Picasso, non sequiturs, clunky aphorisms, critical insights, jabs in the eye, moonings about the unknowable, essays on courage, gushes of memory. "Picasso's Mask," the third volume of his autobiography, after "Anti-Memoirs" and "Felled Oaks," is exasperating. But like everything else he wrote, it is exciting too.

What company the man kept until his death last month! And how odd that Mao, with whom he had so many portentous chats in "Felled Oaks," should have died in the same year. If his conversations with Picasso sound more believable than those with Mao, it may be because we know from other moments that Picasso actually talked this way, in moody fidgets, sometimes the child, sometimes the theory-monger. Malraux himself is consistent in the solemnity he brings, like a cowboy tied to his neck, to every encounter with the great and near-great. No idle gossip here.

To Chagall: "Don't you believe that color changed when Europe invented shadows?" To André Breton: "Do you know where the religious center of the Hopi Indians was? . . . Los Alamos." To Yehudi Menuhin and Nadia Boulanger: "When the Asians heard our great musicians they got the impression that the deepest emotion felt by Europeans was nostalgia."

Fun and Names

These conversations are more fun when people talk back. Menuhin and Boulanger, for instance, disagree with the Asians. "I'd say it was praise, not nostalgia," says Menuhin. And when Malraux tells Picasso "When the Con-table de Bourbon captured Rome his archers chose as their target 'The School of Athens,'" Picasso replies: "They didn't like Raphael, was that it? They were already Cubists." Malraux: "They were unstoppable, going on: 'For though, is already Plato, who was in fact a portrait of Leonardo da Vinci, and some other Greek; who was in fact a portrait of Michelangelo, and all the rest of them—had arrows stuck in their eyes. Great scene for a film.'"

But some people don't want to talk back. "A few days before, when I had asked Rouault what he thought of Poussin, he was chillingly evasive." Or: "The first time I ever saw Utrillo was at a Montmartre grocery woman's house. Wild-looking he was, with a fantastic gorilla at his side. His vocabulary at that point was limited to two words. Lifting his very heavy eyelids onto a desolate void, he asked me, 'Painter, or poet?' sat down, and went to sleep."

A lot of this can be exasperating, and there is a lot of it in "Picasso's Mask." The style, too, exasperates, having gone blowsy and baroque. And perhaps we've heard enough of the Museum Without Walls, that juxtaposing of the ages of art to argue against death, in behalf of "the revolt against man's fate." "The sacred, the supernatural, the unreal." We are as familiar with his theories of metamorphosis as we are with his own many metamorphoses, the series of selves he invented.

And yet the excitement is here as well. There is much on the genius of Picasso, his vital Negro period, those last tarots, the appropriating of the demons and fetishes and fertility figures and spider-dreams of the anonymous past in the service of an aggressive art of the future. There is a superb appreciation of Takanobu's "Portrait of Shigenori" a 12-century Japanese masterpiece I curse myself for never having seen—an appreciation that calls into question most of the assumptions of Western art, from perspective on.

Men of La Mancha

There is also a preoccupation with death. The inscription of Thebes is ever with him: "Listen to the procession of the dead, buzzing like bees . . ." Facing it, one must wear a mask, signifying man, ordaining a soul. One finds, and talks to, Quixotes.

There is nothing here of politics or literature, only a fleeting reference to "Man's Hope," some at all to the superior "Man's Fate," and some glimpses of his career as a bureaucrat of culture: commissioning designs from André Masson and Chagall for the ceilings of the Théâtre de l'Odéon and the Paris Opéra, wanting to plant Picasso's bronze statue of "The Reaper" on the promontory of the Ile Saint-Louis as a monument to Baudelaire's "Fleurs du Mal." Was this the way for an existentialist swashbuckler to fade out, in the arms of de Gaulle?

And what if his cherished Museum Without Walls turns out to be a tourist trap? What if the ages of art, in the form of snapshots and facsimiles, end up in the form of souvenirs, in a gift shop, to show the children and our friends, when we come back from the museum to our everyday iconography of oil rigs and neon and Coke bottles and parody? What if it ends up quaint, instead of wondering and wondrous?

No matter. Mutation and continuity are both necessary to metamorphosis. Malraux's books are in my museum. And if I'm disappointed in his last invention of himself—did he have to be pompous—there are all the others to keep me company, and he earned the right, and one by one the ones who earned that right are gone, until it seems there won't be anybody left to talk to who is worthy of wearing the mask.

Stimulating the Economy

A consensus is forming on the size, composition and timing of the fiscal stimulus needed to get the national economy moving ahead and thereby to reduce unemployment. Mr. Carter's transition staff and the chief executives of fifteen major corporations have offered the President-elect remarkably similar plans combining three basic elements: personal tax cuts, tax incentives for business investment and Federal spending increases focused on the jobs.

There are indeed some differences between the proposals. Ironically the businessmen's fiscal package is larger than that of Mr. Carter's economists—$23 billion against $20 billion. The business executives want the personal income tax cuts to be permanent, while the Carter staff recommends that part of the cut be a rebate on 1976 taxes and part a reduction on 1977 tax liabilities.

Mr. Carter's staff has offered several options to spur business investment in new equipment. The businessmen were divided among themselves on whether the investment tax credit should be raised permanently or temporarily. Some held that a temporary increase would be more likely to accelerate capital spending. The transition staff and business executives both called for $5 billion in various job-creating programs.

From these proposals Mr. Carter should be able to construct a program to attack the short-run economic slowdown without unduly sacrificing long-run tax revenues. To achieve that purpose, he ought to accept his staff's plan of combining tax rebates on this year's income with lower tax withholding from next year's income. This would also seem safer than putting all his eggs in the one basket of a single tax rebate.

While economic research indicates that increases in "permanent income" have a bigger effect on consumer spending than temporary increases (resulting from temporary tax cuts), there is no evidence that temporary tax cuts have no effect at all. Increasing the fiscal package to achieve the desired short-run effect makes more sense than sacrificing revenues permanently—and with them hopes of funding future welfare reform, health care, housing and other social programs, facilitating tax reform and achieving budgetary balance.

For this reason, we think Mr. Carter would also be well advised to propose tax incentives for business investment that promise to deliver early returns without permanently surrendering future tax revenues.

The tax-cutting approach has been sharply criticized by Professor John Kenneth Galbraith and others who believe that the whole fiscal stimulus needed to end the slowdown ought to be focused on the expenditure side of the budget. There is, indeed, strong reason to concentrate public expenditures directly on job-creating programs—and Mr. Carter has indicated he will give priority to that approach. But putting the entire fiscal program into wage subsidies for private employment and public-service jobs might delay and dissipate the impact on the private economy and require huge additional infusions of Federal money.

Given Mr. Carter's hope of spending the more than four hundred billion dollars already in the Federal budget more effectively, we believe it would be unwise to use the entire fiscal package to increase total Federal spending and thereby ease the pressure for economizing and reordering priorities in the existing Federal budget.

Arms Sales Momentum

There were few subjects on which Jimmy Carter spoke with greater feeling during the Presidential campaign than of the urgent need to curb "the almost completely unrestricted sales" of United States arms to other countries. Yet the Ford Administration in its final weeks is taking a number of actions in line with the policies that have established this country as the world's leading arms merchant, with annual sales over $10 billion.

Any Administration runs partly on momentum and President Ford must continue to govern until Mr. Carter takes the oath; but in keeping with the incumbent's promise of a smooth transition he ought to put off decisions that could embarrass or compromise his successor. A case in point is the authorization given by the State Department to an American company to try to sell jet fighter-bombers to India.

Even this first step in the sale process—a license to the McDonnell-Douglas Aircraft Corporation to make its pitch represents a turnabout in American policy which has hitherto banned arms sales to the increasingly repressive Government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. If the sales of the A-4 Skyhawk planes materialized, the transaction would inevitably provoke alarm in Pakistan and intensify that country's pressure on the United States for more sophisticated aircraft.

Only a few days after the November election, it became known that the United States Navy was supporting a projected $4 billion sale by the Northrop Corporation of a land-based model of a new Navy jet fighter plane to Iran. A week later, giving the formal notification now required by law, President Ford declared the Sudan eligible to buy American arms and said such sales "will strengthen the security of the United States and promote world peace."

We commented only a few days ago on the Administration's abortive agreement to furnish President Marcos's authoritarian regime in the Philippines with $500 million in arms, and on earlier arms deals with Spain, Turkey and Greece.

These actions may be a case of an Administration continuing to do what has become all too natural in recent years. But the President and his aides cannot be unaware of the President-elect's strong feelings about what he regards as indiscriminate and excessive arms sales. They ought to take greater care to freeze a policy that could cause serious problems for the incoming Administration and trouble for the United States.

The Cutting Edge

Under fire from students who charged that their education was "irrelevant," many college faculties and administrations in the turbulent 1960's beat a hasty retreat and abandoned most course requirements. Viewed initially as a triumph of student freedom, the absence of a firm framework of study has begun to be recognized, even by many undergraduates, as an abdication of institutional responsibility and a detriment to effective education.

There are encouraging signs that a counterrevolution is now gathering force. Concerned academicians are trying to chart a new course of liberal learning.

The revolt against the old requirements was frequently justified by the stagnation that had turned mandated courses into a bore for students and teachers alike. Many of the courses undergraduates were compelled to take treated students as a captive audience, allowing academic departments to build overstaffed empires, without sufficient concern for the quality of instruction.

Yet the absence of requirements signals a dangerous retreat from the common ground shared by educated men and women. At a time of extreme pressures toward specialization and early career decisions, lack of consensus on the basic intellectual underpinning needed by college graduates only reflects a fragmented society whose elite of talent will find communication ever more difficult.

Fortunately, a number of leading institutions have begun the search for new definitions of a cohesive program of general education. Henry Rosovsky, dean of Harvard's faculty of arts and sciences, has initiated a crusade against an education that has "no common denominator." Harvard, which in the 1940's codified the then prevalent idea of general education, is once again trying to list specific fields in which students ought to have "informed acquaintance."

Columbia, which has never given up on certain basic courses in the humanities, hopes that the rest of academia may once again be persuaded to acknowledge that some of the "great books" remain indispensable to those who claim to be educated.

The issues and the emphasis in any new core curriculum call for an open mind on the part of those who attempt to chart tomorrow's liberal education. The world is no longer bound, as critics of the old approach have rightly charged, by the region between Athens and California. The non-Western world cannot be ignored. An understanding of science and technology cannot be left to the engineers. Knowledge of the urban condition and environment is crucial.

There has been a tendency to blame politicians too exclusively for their narrow view of America's future. The range of a self-governing nation's vision is not primarily determined by its elected leaders. The key to a wider focus is held by educated citizens who are any civilization's cutting edge. The return to a common core in undergraduate education is essential to sharpen that edge.

Relief for Burn Victims

Repeatedly in recent years New Yorkers have been shocked by the gross inadequacy of local facilities to care for seriously burned patients. After disasters as diverse as a plane crash at Kennedy Airport or an explosion in a Bronx social club, there are reports of patients having to be flown to Pennsylvania, to Boston and even to Texas for treatment, forced journeys which inevitably impose greater risk of death or permanent injury. The situation is alleviated somewhat with the opening of New York Hospital's new 24-bed burn center, but even this addition will fall far short of the need.

A person burned over 70 or 80 percent of his body faces almost every imaginable medical problem, and requires the services of physicians and nurses trained in almost every medical and surgical specialty, to say nothing of psychiatric help. Authoritative sources estimate that in the first weeks of such care, the daily cost of supplying all the needed help can easily reach $300 or more. Such expenditures are justified by the fact that medicine is now capable of saving the great majority of badly burned patients and rehabilitating them to live normal or nearly normal lives. The question nevertheless remains: how to finance such enormously expensive care.

New York Hospital has come up with an idea that deserves consideration even at a time when the emphasis is properly on the need to reduce the state's overall surplus of general hospital beds. The proposal is for creation of an autonomous Hospital for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery. One part of this hospital would be an 80-bed burn center that would supply the needed costly services for these patients. This section would inevitably run a large deficit. Paired with it, however, would be a 78-bed facility for plastic surgery, most of whose patients would be seeking cosmetic surgery, at their own cost, since such surgery normally is not covered by private and government medical insurance plans. The idea is to cover the burn center's deficits by the plastic surgery center's profits — an innovative economic approach to the problem of providing adequate treatment for burn victims.

Letters to the Editor

Transition: Foreign-Policy 'Idiocies'

To the Editor:

At least three recent developments in international affairs indicate the compelling need to re-survey fundamentals of American foreign policy postures and processes which have distorted the American self-image and stunted the growth of American international influence during thirty years. There is the effort of Dr. Kissinger to buy Greco-Turkish mutual accommodation by giving a short billion to Greece and four billion to Turkey (which has four times the population of Greece) in a sloppy effort to "aid the defense against Communism" and to "steady NATO." There is the offer to give $1 billion to the Philippines over a five-year period in return for the use of bases. A third item is the unconscionable waste of the B-1 bomber construction, a peculiarly profligate effort to steady the job market for aerospace civilians and the overprivileged in the Pentagon.

The logic that "mutual defense pacts"—presumably designed to defend smaller nations from Russians and Chinese—are of no benefit, really, to the locals and therefore must be paid for entirely by the United States, with profits provided to local real-estate owners, can only be termed absurd. The attempt to buy peace between other nations by the U.S. taxpayer's buying off both sides is madness. It is especially designed to perpetuate overbalanced American budgets, to provide illusory and inflationary economie benefits to overseas areas and to assure American disruption and interference in shaky overseas economies.

The obvious and unfortunate waffling by Mr. Carter on the B-1 bomber indicates the high probability that these foreign policy idiocies designed and promoted by the "Eastern Establishment" of both (or neither) political parties for thirty years will continue in monotony and futility.

One of the few clear-cut policy differences between Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter was an assurance hinted at or stated by Mr. Carter that review of American foreign military and diplomatic presumptions and policy fundamentals would be undertaken following a Carter victory. The greatest loss to sanity during the next four years would be ongoing commitment to the perceptions of international relations ingrained in those fine folks who gave us Vietnam, Chile, Russian-dominated Cuba, right-wing dictatorships in Latin America, Southeast Asia and elsewhere—among other gems—and above all an insatiable and ever-growing white elephant in the Pentagon.

There is a gnawing fear that Mr. Carter will ignore the need and the public demand of the less articulate for a reassessment of the causes of thirty years of fumbling which cannot be casually blamed on the inept Slavic Marxists or the confused Maoists.

How to Redirect a Bureaucracy

To the Editor:

Jimmy Carter recognizes, I am sure, that reorganization of government bureaucracies is a costly enterprise in terms of dislocating ongoing operations and the expenditure of the political capital of a new President. David Rosenbaum's piece, "Is a Rational Bureaucracy a Rational Goal?" (Week in Review, Nov. 28) is too pessimistic, however. In arguing that attempts at reorganization are never ideal or final solutions he recognizes that reorganization is never for eternity.

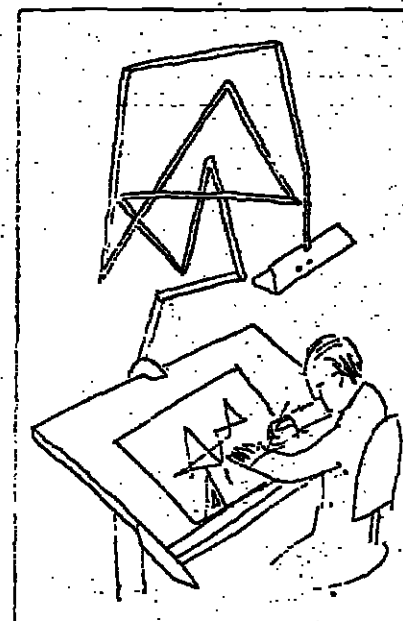

But the advantages of reorganization, whether through the creation, elimination or modification of agencies, can be considerable. Aside from their value in allowing a new President greater latitude in personnel selection, they allow a chief executive, whether mayor, governor or President, to highlight his concept of public priorities and redirect the energies of the bureaucracy.

While the symbolism of reorganization may often be lost in the unsuccessful implementation of management reform, a criticism not without basis in assessing Mayor Lindsay's superagencies of yesterday, New Yorkers would stand to benefit from at least the following changes in the Federal bureaucracy:

(1) Consolidation of consumer advocacy and revision of the Federal regulatory agencies.

(2) Consolidation of income transfer programs to promote consistency, eliminate overlap and promote equity.

(3) Consolidation of existing training and education programs eliminating the present overlap between the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

Nicholas Bergsma

(4) Redefinition of the role of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (and possibly renaming) to deal with Federal-local government relations on a national scale, including technical assistance in management and debt administration.

(5) Creation of a new Department of Economic Development to be concerned with the state of the national economy and the availability of sufficient job opportunities.

No one should doubt that the cost of government reorganization is high, yet its potential for redirecting and energizing government are great. Implementation is the rub.

'Police Are Special'

To the Editor:

Despite the deplorable tactics used by some of the police to obtain salary increases and better working conditions, most of us still feel in our hearts that policemen are special and, along with the city's firemen, deserve special treatment. The overriding factor in their case is that they lay their lives on the line each working day in a city which is fast becoming a jungle unfit for human habitation, especially for the elderly.

The almost daily reports of scandalous fraud and maladministration through which the city is wasting and losing hundreds of millions of dollars make ridiculous the protestations that the city doesn't have enough money. New York City's fiscal crises are caused not so much by lack of money as by failure to spend money wisely. The latest report (Nov. 14), reveals that the city is making welfare payments to parents on behalf of children who are no longer being cared for by them, with a projected loss to the city of $2 million every year.

Perhaps even worse than the loss in dollars is the realization that the foster care worker and the public assistance worker, both employed by the city's Department of Social Services and both supposedly working toward the welfare of these families and their eventual independence and self-support, are not talking to each other and sharing their plans and efforts to achieve those ends.

When will the city begin to move immediately on the facts of these reports of fraud and waste, applying prompt remedial measures of commonsense administration in place of the tired promises that computerization will eventually solve such problems? Surely, more than enough money would be saved to meet the cost of the recommended salary increases for the police and the firemen, and no doubt for the teachers of our children as well.

Wasteful Tokens

To the Editor:

In his Dec. 4 letter regarding the subway system, Stanley Turkel proposes as item (3) that the T.A. should install "token change machines" which work and are kept in order.

I suggest that tokens be eliminated. Instead, the turnstiles should be altered to accept quarters (two per ride) and/or half-dollars. Using coins instead of tokens would not only result in savings for the T.A. but also benefit the subway rider, for whom we see very little consideration.

Save the Electoral Col

To the Editor:

In his Dec. 4 letter, Myrot proposes that Presidents be elected the popular vote in the country. I strongly object to this suggestion for the following reasons:

• If one or two states, corruptions of some officials, tremendous vote for one candidate would affect the vote in the country. All one has to do is the way Mayor Hague of City reported large majorities in one State many years ago, one state stuffs the ballot results are limited to that one

• At present, Presidential dates travel all-over the counting support because they need states as they can get. If the were all that mattered, car would concentrate on ten large and ignore the rest of the country. Each area is important: that is what makes our choosing Presidents so effective

Presidential elections have very well for the last 150 years keep it that way. WALTER J. S.

Questions on UNESCO

To the Editor:

These days it is rare for the States or any other democratic "win" on an issue of principle. United Nations or at one of the specialized agencies. Therefore, quite understandable that even most meager "victory" should I accompanied by the hope that the Nations Educational, Scientific Cultural Organization, for as may be returning to the road of le from the cul de sac of politiciz-

Israel has just been restored UNESCO membership, a status taken from it by UNESCO in such restoration alone cannot ever justify the Times' November editorial which said that "in the of Israel's reinstatement, the U States might well consider resumption of payment of its dues—suspend 1974—which account for next quarter of the agency's budget."

As one who has followed UN developments closely, may I say that before we consider resumption payments appropriate comment both houses of Congress can evaluate the extent of UNESCO's lization to determine whether UNESCO is desirable and in the d cratic interest. Expert tests should be solicited from academic scientists and other intellectuals have participated in UNESCO meetings or have been concerned over its cut policies. Such a recommendation, particularly important since UNESCO's politicization involves not in Israel but also UNESCO's attempt legitimate government control of news media.

Only after a full-scale investigation by Congress and published findings should we consider resumption of payments to UNESCO. At the least, let us wait for the next meeting of UNESCO's European regional group which Israel is now a member; see what happens.

The Injustices of Plea-Bargaining

By Irving R. Kaufman

son revolt is the product of felt rather than physical hardship. Now widely recognized that prison grievances are fueled by unjust—and sometimes inexplicable—penalties in their sentences. But I believe that the pervasive practice of bargaining is a yet more profound of the disrespect prisoners feel in the criminal justice system.

A criminal trial is a rarity. With very exceptions, virtually all criminal cases are entered by a guilty plea. No criminal defendant or prosecutor, in a properly functioning judicial system, is bludgeoned by delay into bargaining for a trial. To the degree that a judicial trial falls short of this ideal, it will breed cynicism and distrust.

One reflection on the charges at our criminal-justice system, inclusion is inescapable that the trial provides the only assurance of just, consistent and sure law. Of even greater importance, however, is the impressive ritual legal proceeding itself.

trial embodies our highest ideals. Its preoccupation with the option of innocence and its respect of proof to a moral certainty society's fundamental regard justice be done to the accused. The pronouncement of judgment on the unanimous verdict of a jury's peers is as solemn an act, light with grandeur, as society can impose upon the law. The enormity of his conduct, process of trial may often be crucial in justifying punishment to the accused and demonstrating to society the fairness, and firmness, of its legal system.

We cannot ignore the perversions of justice that may be engendered by bargaining pleas. There are fees are based on the assumption that the client will plead guilty, and they are conscious of the financial imperative of inducing the client to do so. The defense attorney often paints the possibility of a favorable outcome at trial in the darkest hues.

In difficult cases, he may even recruit friends and family members to implore the defendant to enter a guilty plea. In many instances, the lawyer's advice may be wise. But a guilty plea brought about by a system that encourages such pressures always risks undermining faith in our criminal-justice system.

The pressure to induce a guilty plea undermines respect for law in a more direct way. A criminal defendant begins with a corrupt view of the world. The secrecy of plea-bargaining reinforces these unfortunate convictions. Indeed, a lawyer whose time is exclusively devoted to plea-bargaining is always tempted to permit the impression that the bargain was won through favoritism and personal ties. A process that ought to be a lesson in honesty and fair play merely confirms the cynicism of those subject to it.

The response is made that elimination of plea-bargaining would further delay a "justice" that is already far from swift. We are warned that increased delay would weaken deterrence and prolong the agony of defendants languishing in jails awaiting trial. It is true that mandating a trial of almost all criminal cases in our financially starved courts would increase the difficulties for an already overworked and overwhelmed criminal-justice system.

But we must candidly face up to the ugly price we are paying by relying almost exclusively on bargained guilty pleas. A system of penal law cannot aspire to be effective unless those subject to it, and the general community, consider it just. Plainly, treatment that the accused believes to be contrived is not rehabilitative. And it is equally apparent that, at least in a democratic society, punishment that is viewed as oppressive cannot deter.

Justice is a moral imperative. It cannot be sacrificed to expediency without undermining society's very foundations. Encouraging plea-bargains as a means of expediting the criminal process is a mere palliative, and ultimately self-defeating.

The "economies" resulting from plea-bargaining can be exaggerated all too easily. Years before prosecutors and defense counsel became addicted to the negotiated plea, defendants often pleaded guilty in open court, freely and willingly. Many defendants are eager to confess their guilt before the judge and assuage a troubled conscience. In the small number of jurisdictions that have eliminated plea-bargaining, prosecutors have abjured "overcharging," and the courts have not been inundated by a cascade of criminal trials. And let us not overlook that plea-bargaining itself is often time-consuming and productive of delay.

Some problems of delay will result from abolishing plea-bargaining. The appropriate response to this marginal increase in undue delay is more efficient use of the courts. A wise investment of resources in the trial phase of the judicial process will, of course, be required. And we must recognize that the courts cannot continue to bear the full brunt of society's ills. If they are to perform their more important tasks well, it is urgent that they be relieved of less critical matters.

To assure everyone accused of crime his day in court will greatly tax our ingenuity and commitment to justice. But the stakes are high, and the regeneration of our respect for law well worth the sacrifice.

Perfection and Progress

By Anthony Lewis

WASHINGTON—Last spring an unusual combination of liberals and conservatives in Congress joined the Attorney General, Edward H. Levi, in a new approach to an intractable old problem. They introduced a jointly drafted bill to control wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping for foreign intelligence purposes.

The bill was amended and approved last summer by the Senate Judiciary and Intelligence Committees. But there was opposition from some liberal members and from such outside groups as the American Civil Liberties Union, and the bill never reached the floor before Congress adjourned. I think the liberal opposition was mistaken. A curious episode at hand indicates why.

Last week a story in The New York Times quoted unnamed "senior intelligence officials" as criticizing Attorney General Levi for his refusal to approve electronics surveillance. They said there had been six proposals in the last year to wiretap Americans or resident aliens believed to be in touch with foreign agents—and Mr. Levi had approved none.

For anyone aware of past abuses, that story was a high compliment to Edward Levi. It made clear that he had actually put effective controls on eavesdropping for "national security" purposes—a practice that went on for decades without meaningful standards or scrutiny.

What Mr. Levi has done, with President Ford's full support, is first of all to guarantee that the Attorney General himself will pass on any request for surveillance to obtain foreign intelligence. He will do so not by hastily signing a piece of paper—as often used to happen—but only after learning the reasons for the request in detail and having them studied by an advisory group.

Under Mr. Levi's standards, surveillance may be directed at an individual only when there is "probable cause to believe he is a conscious agent or collaborator of a foreign power." That rule would have prevented the tapping of journalists and White House officials designated by Henry Kissinger because of a news leak.

But suppose we have, someday, an Attorney General less meticulous and determined in these matters than Edward Levi. Or suppose we have a President less committed to his Attorney General than Gerald Ford has been, or more susceptible to pressures from intelligence officials.

Those are hardly far-fetched suppositions. In the intelligence business, claims of urgency are inevitable. Resisting the pressures—sticking to the rules—will almost certainly require something more permanent and awesome than one Attorney General's policy. The something more is legislation.

Mr. Levi remarked the other day: "Over the long run, I don't think Attorneys General can adhere to such a policy without the support of a legislative framework." Indeed, the public complaint by "senior intelligence officials" looks like an attempt to soften up the Carter Administration on the assumption that there will be no legislative framework.

The bill put forward by Mr. Levi and others—notably Senator Edward Kennedy—aims first at accountability within the executive branch. Any request for surveillance would have to come from the President's Assistant for National Security Affairs or from a Presidential appointee in the national security area who is subject to Senate confirmation. He would have to certify that he seeks "essential" foreign intelligence information that "cannot feasibly be obtained by other investigative techniques."

ABROAD AT HOME

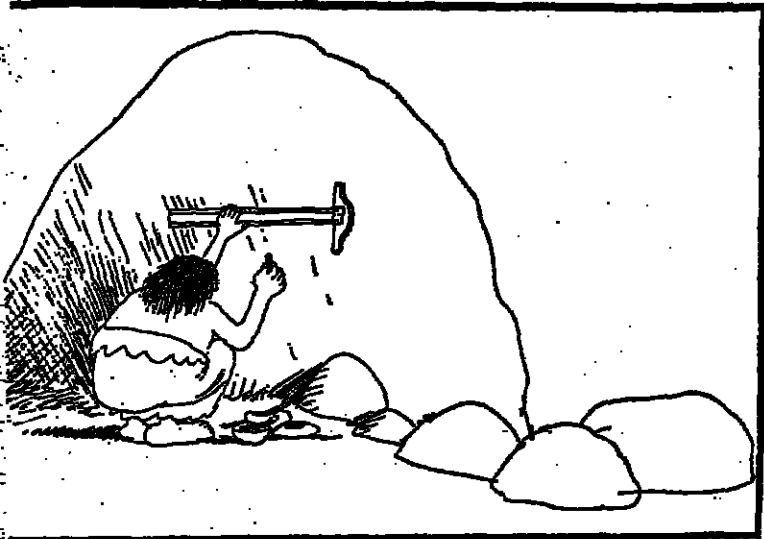

If the Attorney General approved, a surveillance order would then be sought from one of seven designated Federal judges—a procedure paralleling that used to get wiretap orders in domestic criminal matters. The judge could approve only if he found probable cause to believe that a citizen or resident alien who was the target was knowingly engaged in—or conspiring for—terrorism, sabotage or clandestine intelligence activity on behalf of a foreign power.

Liberal criticism of the original draft brought about highly useful amendments tightening definitions and procedures. For example, surveillance would be limited to suspected criminal activity except for a narrow category of persons acting for foreign intelligence networks.

A respected professor of constitutional law, Paul Mishkin of the University of California, Berkeley, has called the bill "a truly major step toward effective guarantees against improper government intrusion" and toward "constitutional governance." It undoubtedly would be an enormous improvement on existing law, but some continue to oppose it as less than perfect.

In this instance as in others, perfectionism seems to me an enemy of progress. In the 1960's some liberals opposed moderate bills to regulate domestic wiretapping, and then something much worse passed in the heat of passion over crime in the streets. The danger now is that we may lose the chance for wise legislation on this most difficult problem of liberty and security.

find and use diaries kept during the period about which he is writing. Even the journals of obscure people are valuable, for they mirror the mood of a given era. Honest writing is more precious than precious writing. Historian Carl Becker said that Everyman is his own historian because he is a sifter and selector of his nation's past. Mark Twain, a fitful diarist, wrote in his autobiography: "The last quarter of a century my life has been pretty constantly and faithfully devoted to the study of the human race—that is to say, the study of myself, for in my individual person I am the entire race."

Historians writing about 17th-century England study the diary of Samuel Pepys, which he kept for ten years. Others researching 18th-century England examine the journal of James Boswell, which he kept for thirty years. Those interested in New York City of the last century turn to the diary of George Templeton Strong, which he kept for forty years.

The American Diary Repository could be funded by the Federal Government, foundations, philanthropists, the American Historical Association, the Organization of American Historians, the American Association for State and Local History, etc.

A building could be put up in Washington, D.C., or the repository could be situated on the campus of some university. However, it should be an independent entity, not an arm of government or a unit of a university. The Oral History Collection at Columbia University is not dependent, financially or administratively, upon Columbia. The repository could be staffed by historians, librarians, archivists and computer operators.

They might formulate criteria for the acceptance of diaries, and others may wish to speak to this point. As for myself, I would welcome all journals because however modest and humble the diarist, I believe that his journal contains something of value. Surely there are historical nuggets in Aunt Minnie's diary in the trunk in the attic.

Donors would not be paid for their diaries, but perhaps they could get a tax break. In the main, their reward would be an awareness that they would be granted a kind of immortality. Never underestimate the power of ego: Within a few years, the repository would contain tens of thousands of diaries.

The repository could publish exceptional journals. The George Templeton Strong diary, for instance, was edited and published in four volumes. Any diary worthy of publication would yield royalties to be split between the repository and each diarist or his heirs.

If anyone wanted to write a history of Seattle he could apply to the repository, and computers might produce, perhaps, 67 cards identifying Seattle residents who kept diaries. By using them, the writer could prepare a better history of Seattle than otherwise would be possible.

If donors worried lest their diaries embarrass themselves or others, they could stipulate that their confessions might not be examined or used for a stated number of years or decades.

With the establishment of the American Diary Repository, the histories of the future would become richer, warmer, more human. Goethe said: "If you wish to leave something useful to future generations, this cannot but be confession."

Edward Robb Ellis worked 35 years as a reporter and now writes popular history. For 49 years he has kept a diary that, he says, now has 12 million words and occupies 16 feet of shelf space.

Of Kurds and Conscience

by William Safire

WASHINGTON—According to some best doctors, Mustafa Barzani, of the Kurdish people, should die of cancer about six months after the assumption that his illness is terminal, and with the tacit understanding that he would not try to enlist support for the Kurds in his days. General Barzani was perched on a cot in a clinic here at the State Department.

The embarrassment of his doctors and State Department officials is not his. His iron-gray hair has turned white, his eyes are bright and clear, and though he looks awkward in civilian clothes, the grip of his hand is strong and purposeful. Months ago, the State Department was uncomfortable at the presence of a living reminder of our most diplomatic double-cross—told to return to Iraq, where 38,000 refugees from Iraqi vengeance—Mustafa Barzani said no, that if he were to leave the United States he would go to Iraq and face execution.

At Foggy Bottom wanted to get blood on his hands, so our State Department diplomats backed off and stayed. The reason he stays, and why he is so grimly determined to stay, is to prick the conscience of the Administration to redress the wrong that a few Americans secretly did to him.

Kurds—perhaps 16 million of them in Iraq, Turkey, and Iran—are an ethnic group, a mountain people with their own history and culture. They live under three flags. When the interests of the United States and Iran to annoy the Soviet Union, we encouraged the Kurds to revolt, and supplied them with arms; but when Iran and Iraq made a deal, the United States and Iran left their Kurdish clients high and dry.

Since the aid to the Kurds was in secret, the power-politicians at State did not have to explain this unprecedented betrayal. The sordid story came out in Daniel Schorr's publication of the House of Representatives' Pike Report on the C.I.A.

The consequences of our double-cross are what might interest a new Administration, one presumably more interested in America's moral position. The Iraqis have begun their own solution to the Kurdish problem, by executing several hundred leaders of the abortive revolt, and by "Arabizing" over 300,000 of their three million Kurds—moving them out of their homes to the Arab south, dispersing them and denying their culture. Iraqis are being offered bonuses to marry and assimilate Kurds.

Here is a culture being systematically demolished, a people being destroyed, and the United States—partially responsible for the Kurdish plight—has raised no voice in protest.

Let us not picture the Kurds as democrats, or Mustafa Barzani as James Madison. A generation ago, when the Soviets planned to use the Kurds to harass the Iranians and Turks, General Barzani abided in the Soviet Union a dozen years, learning Russian and befriending Marshal Grechko. Even today, if the Soviets were to switch their policy toward Iraq, and offer to support the Kurds, the mountain people would gratefully turn to them. Although General Barzani now forcefully asserts his anti-Communism, his people—first and foremost—want to survive as Kurds, and could be expected to take help when it came.

What do the Kurds want? Not independence, not a new nation carved out of three existing nations. They want to be let alone, as an autonomous region of Iraq, loyal to Baghdad but living their own lives. If that were all the Palestinians wanted—autonomy under Jordan—an instant Mideast settlement would be possible.

How can a newly moral American foreign policy help bring Kurdish autonomy about, and erase the stain of betrayal?

First, we should send a signal that we are interested by accepting some 600 refugees, mostly young and activist and threatened, to join the 400 here now.

Next, put Kurdistan on the agenda for our bilateral discussions with the Russians. They supply and dominate Iraq, controlling the largest air base, Shaiba, and Umm Qasr (a well-named naval base). As in the past, the Soviets could mediate between the Kurds and the Iraqis.

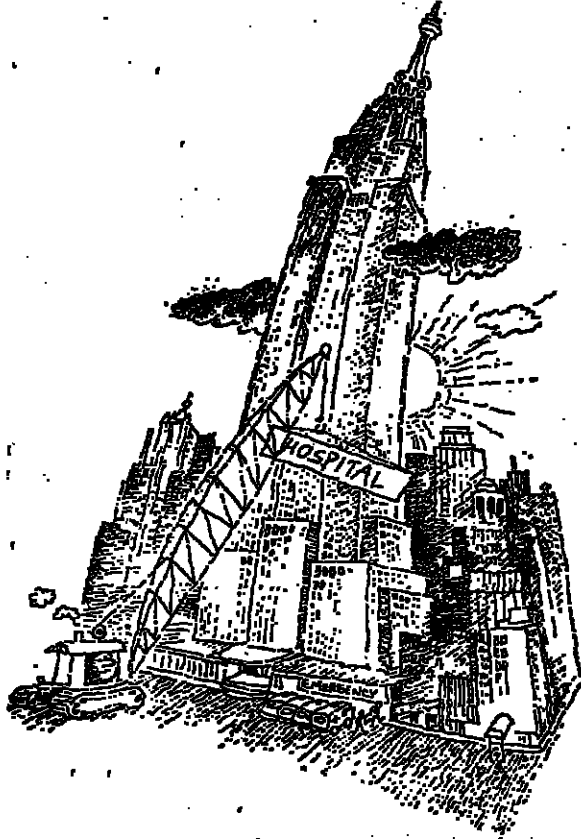

Next, lean on the Iranians and the Egyptians. General Barzani is anxious not to offend the Shah, who has taken in so many refugees fleeing execution, and "Arabization" in Iraq, and I will explore the Iranian position in a future column. But the United States is not helpless in dealing with Iran and Egypt.

Finally, put the Kurdish question before the United Nations, and use the spotlight of publicity to stop the killing of a culture, while reminding other cultural groups that identity can be sought in a larger, diverse nation.

Will it work? Who knows? But America owes such an effort to her conscience. Mustafa Barzani takes the plastic-tipped American cigar out of his mouth and says: "We do not want to be used to destroy relations between Iran and Iraq. We do not want to be anybody's pawn. We are an ancient people, we want our autonomy, we want sarbasti—freedom."

"I do not know who will take my place one day. But they cannot crush us."

JUST HOW MUCH HOSPITAL DOES THIS CITY NEED?

We may have 4,500 unneeded hospital beds now. And there are more a-bu-lding.

We at Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York believe many of these new beds are unnecessary.

And some new technical facilities being installed may be redundant.

We think that new facilities should be planned. And present duplication should be eliminated... whether in New York City or any other county in our downstate area.

We want everyone to get care—quality care—when it's needed.

As long as there's costly duplication, it can put strains on the quality of care, by spreading it too thin.

We believe in eliminating surplus hospital beds. We have argued in favor of this for years. We're happy to see it happening now.

After all, an empty bed costs about 70% as much to maintain as one that's occupied, and it tends to encourage unnecessary treatment.

We have spoken longer and more strongly than any other organization in New York State in our effort to control present surpluses and avoid future ones.

But much more must be done, and it requires public support. We are asking that you be informed, involved, and hopefully, support our efforts and those of others to correct the situation.

Sophisticated facilities: more can be less. We've seen a trend toward proliferation of facilities for open-heart surgery and kidney transplants. We've worked to control that proliferation.

Certainly, we want to save and prolong lives. But again, let's emphasize quality.

These delicate operations are best concentrated in units with the most experience: an under-used facility may deliver care of lesser quality at higher cost.

"CAT's" that cost $400,000 to $700,000. Ever hear of the CAT Scanner? (CAT=computerized axial tomography.)

It's a complex new device that can scan the brain or whole body with x-rays, then produce a computerized picture for doctors and CAT specialists to analyze.

It's a super x-ray. It can detect certain trouble spots with remarkable clarity and efficiency. It may be the greatest new diagnostic tool in years.

On the other hand, some of its analyses can be done as effectively with existing equipment.

And its cost is enormous. We're worried that too many physicians and facilities in the city are going to run out and buy one.

We've requested stronger legislation to deter that proliferation: Governor Carey has supported the urgent need for such a law. Again, carefully controlled installations may deliver higher quality at less cost than if they are permitted to simply proliferate.

Who's paying? You. Remember this. You pay the health care bill. Whether in direct charges, taxes, or the cost of your health care plan.

That's why we need your interest and support.

We don't think you can afford to be indifferent.

We believe there's more to good health than just paying bills.

Little Heat Expected In Fire District Vote

Dozens of voters will go to the polls tomorrow in New York State's 920 independent fire districts to elect fire commissioners who will spend more than $50 million in tax monies next year.

In some districts, only half a dozen voters may turn out. Probably no election generates less interest through the course of the year than the selection of members of the Board of Fire Commissioners...

In Westchester County, for example, only 5,000 of a possible 150,000 eligible voters turned out last year in the country's 32 fire district elections. Half that total came in one district—Eastchester...

What town officials find particularly vexing (although few will admit it for the record) is that the town is required to collect the taxes for the fire districts, even though they have no say on how the money is spent.

Jack Cassidy, Actor, Dies at 49, In Fire at Los Angeles Apartment

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 12—Jack Cassidy, whose career took him from Broadway musicals to film and television roles, died today in a fire that swept through his penthouse apartment.

The actor's badly burned body was found in the apartment and identified by the Los Angeles Medical Examiner through dental charts, according to a spokesman for the county sheriff's office.

Mr. Cassidy, 49 years old, was formerly married to Shirley Jones and was the father, from a previous marriage, of David Cassidy, the pop singer. The fire in which he died extensively damaged the interior of his penthouse apartment and, according to fire officials, was apparently touched off by a cigarette left smoldering on a couch.

A Man of Many Roles

By WOLFGANG SAXON
An incarnation of dimpled, rugged Irish-American handsomeness and wit, Jack Cassidy made it his specialty to play leading men who caricatured leading men as preening, if crafty, fops.

He established himself in the musical theater and was most familiar in recent years to the television audience, particularly to viewers of talk and game shows. But he returned to Broadway just a year ago for what turned out to be his farewell appearance in his special role, a self-admiring, arrogant actor.

The play was "Murder Among Friends," a comedy mystery by Bob Barry staged at the Biltmore. The critics found it to be an evening's pleasant entertainment and made it clear that Mr. Cassidy's performance had helped to make it that, playing the actor targeted for murder by his wife, played by Janet Leigh, and her lover, who happened to be the actor's agent.

Clive Barnes of The New York Times called Mr. Cassidy "storkily brilliant" and "marvelous." "He walks on the set wearing his ego like a cloak and this mind like a dagger," Mr. Barnes wrote.

"His timing is impeccable, and with the right pauses, rhythms and expressions, he can make the most harmless lines sound wickedly and bizarrely funny."

KENNETH R. SMITH, SERVED WITH NAVY IN TWO WARS

Kenneth R. Smith, a retired stockbroker who had been a naval aviator in both World Wars died yesterday in Community Hospital, Glen Cove, L.I. He was 82 years old and lived at a 67 Wolver Hollow Road in Upper Brookville, L.I.

Stationed in France for antisubmarine patrol work, he and his crew of two were once rescued after drifting at sea for more than two days in their plane. In the spring of 1918 he was credited with sinking a German submarine, using a depth bomb. He received the Navy Cross and the Croix de Guerre with palm.

In World War II he re-entered the Navy, rose to commander, and was based in Corpus Christi, Tex., and Kodiak, Alaska.

Mr. Smith acquired a seat on the New York Stock Exchange in 1922 and from 1924 to 1934, headed the firm of Smith, Graham & Rockwell, Continuing as a floor broker, he retired in 1974.

Surviving are his wife, the former Eleanor McCullough; a daughter, Eleanor Newell; one grandchild, and two great-grandchildren.

GROUP SEEKS TO REVIVIFY ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAMS

An effort to revitalize the city's anti-poverty programs — now down to $37 million a year in Federal and city funds from a 1970-71 peak of $42 million — began yesterday at the call of the Council Against Poverty and its administrative arm, the Community Development Agency.

Arts and Leisure section, admired Mr. Cassidy's "unassailable aplomb."

It was the type of acting that had earned him a 1963 Tony award for his portrayal of Mr. Kodaly, a dashing Hungarian lover and philanderer in the musical "She Loves Me." The year after that, Mr. Cassidy again won critical acclaim when he starred opposite Carol Burnett in the musical "Fade Out—Fade In," playing the role of an actor.

Mr. Cassidy achieved success nationally as a dramatic actor in 1970 when he was the civilian defense counsel in the "Hollywood Ten" case. The "Hollywood Ten" production of "The Andersonville Trial" by Paul LeVitt, seen here on Channel 13, The drama revolved around the trial of the commander of the Confederate prisoner-of-war camp at Andersonville, Ga., who was accused in the death of 15,000 prisoners.

The play was directed by George C. Scott and won Mr. Cassidy the Emmy award nomination for the outstanding single performance by a leading actor.

It had been a long way for the Irish kid from Richmond Hill, Queens, son of a railroad engineer. Born John Cassidy on March 5, 1927, he made his first appearance at 16 in the chorus of Mike Todd's "Something for the Boys" in 1943, when producers were glad to find people who could act, sing and dance and were under draft age.

Sang and Danced

Following his graduation from Richmond Hill High School, young Cassidy took singing lessons with Polly Robertson. He also was lucky in having Ben Dove, of music hall fame, for an uncle and to be steered by him to the right auditions. Thus, he sang and danced his way through a number of productions, from "Sadie Thompson" to "South Pacific" in 1949.

In between stage jobs he worked for the Post Office to make ends meet, having already earned his keep as a bellhop, hotel clerk, chauffeur and stable boy, among others.

But his versatility began to put him in demand, and he got his first featured part in the musical comedy "Small Wonder" in 1948. Among the better-known presentations in which he held roles in those years were "Wish You Were Here" in 1952, "The Importance of Being Earnest" and "Witness for the Prosecution" in 1955.

That year, he and Shirley Jones headed the cast in a government-sponsored ANTA production of "Oklahoma" that toured France and Italy, playing to enthusiastic audiences. In 1956, he married Miss Jones—his first marriage—to Evelyn Ward, a television actress, having ended in divorce—while they were co-starring in John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" at the Cambridge (Mass.) Music Festival.

Mr. Cassidy also played in "Wonderful Town" at the Brussels World Fair in 1959. He broke out of the musical mold as a dramatic actor by playing the lead in a Los Angeles production of "Epitaph for George Dillon."

Had Supper Club Act

He and Miss Jones eventually developed a supper club act with which they toured when not otherwise engaged. The two again starred in an ANTA musical "Maggie Flynn" in 1963. Their marriage ended in divorce last year.

Mr. Cassidy also had a starring role in the musical "Superman" in 1966 and in the Irish play "The Mundy Scheme" in 1967.

Long associated with the Phoenix Theater—Mr. Cassidy appeared there in "Sandhog" in 1954—he was among the star alumni who led the cast in "Phoenix Rising," a musical and dramatic salute to that institution as it opened its 20th season in 1976.

His many television credits included "The Ed Sullivan Show," "The Lucille Ball Show," "I Spy," "Lux Video Theatre," "Gunsmoke," "The Alfred Hitchcock Presents," "The Bell Telephone Hour," "Sunset Strip" and a series with his wife, "Date With Shirley and Jack," on British ATV television.

In addition, Mr. Cassidy was heard on a number of record albums and disks, usually presenting songs from the musicals in which he had appeared.

He also played a detective in the Bette Davis film "Bunny O'Hare" (1971) eponymous courier in the spy movie "Tiger Sanction" (1973) and the actor John Bark in the 1974 film "W. C. Fields and Me," seen here last April.

No one was hurt, according to a spokesman, who said the dredge carried a crew of 80. It was not known how many crew members were aboard the Swedish ship, the Don Carlos.

Police Report Art Forger, Facing Extradition Order, Killed Himself on Ibiza

IBIZA, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—Elmyr de Hory, reputed to be the world's best art forger, committed suicide yesterday here at his villa on this island in the Balearics, because he faced almost certain extradition to France, the police said today.

The police said that Mr. de Hory was told yesterday he would almost certainly be sent to France in connection with the sale of $1.3 million in fake pictures to a Texas millionaire. Two earlier French requests for Mr. de Hory's extradition had been turned down. A third hearing began here last week and though the result was not announced, the police said that Mr. de Hory learned yesterday that France's position would be granted.

The painter's lawyer, Rafael Perera, said he had been very worried by the extradition proceedings and had said he could not face the thought of going to jail.

Clifford Irving called Mr. de Hory the world's best forger in a book called "Fake." Orson Welles made him the subject of a film of the same title.

Mr. de Hory, a dapper white-haired 65-year-old man, fooled the art world with his imitations of Modigliani, Matisse, Dufy and Chagall. But he always denied he was a forger.

"I never invent, I never copy," he once said. "A forgery or a fake is when you draw, copy or try to pretend something. I've never pretended and I've never put someone else's signature on anything."

Neighborhood residents gathered outside building in Los Angeles yesterday after fire swept through the penthouse apartment of Jack Cassidy.

Friends of Kagan Say He Used $11,000 Boomis Gave for Beame, but Matched It

By NICHOLAS GAGE

Arnold H. Kagan said yesterday that he had used $11,000 that Christopher Boomis, the developer, gave secretly for Beame's 1973 campaign, but that he had matched the same amount in his own name through a relative.

Kagan's friends offered an account of how money from Mr. Boomis had been "laundered" to the campaign through a scheme in which Mr. Kagan, and Goldman, who served on Mayor Beame's finance committee, said that about a month before the election, Mr. Boomis turned over two checks for $5,000 and another for $1,000 to Mr. Goldman, a close friend of Kagan's and a cousin of Rita Weisberg, who lives in Willowdale, Ontario, a suburb of Toronto, and are related to Mr. Kagan. "It was all a family thing," an associate of Mr. Kagan said in describing the "laundering" of the Boomis contributions.

Mr. Kagan's friends said that he had followed the elaborate procedure to hide the source of the $11,000 at the urging of his cousin, Mr. Goldman, and not in expectation of future favors from Mayor Beame. Mr. Kagan's company, Hegeman-Harris, has not built anything in New York City in 17 years, the friends said.

Mr. Kagan's friends would not disclose to what names Mr. Boomis's checks had been made out, but Mr. Boomis has said he wrote them out to individuals whose names were supplied him by Mr. Goldman—people he understood to be associated with Mr. Kagan.

Furthermore, Mr. Kagan's friends would not say if the individuals to whom the checks had been made out were the ones who actually had endorsed them.

Last July an assistant district attorney said during a court hearing related to the case that forgery was among the crimes under investigation along with bribery, receiving bribes, grand larceny and violation of the election laws.

Mr. Boomis has said that he had contributed at least $33,000 to the 1973 Beame campaign, $22,000 of it secretly, at the request of Bernard Beame and Mr.

Goldman, who served on the Beame finance committee, as did Mr. Boomis.

According to the developer, he met with Mr. Goldman and Bernard Beame early in October of 1973 in the office of the Mayor's son at the Barclay Hotel, which served as the Beame campaign headquarters.

Mr. Boomis has said that he agreed to the deal proposed during the meeting with Mr. Goldman and Bernard Beame. Mr. Goldman has refused to comment about the alleged deal and Bernard Beame has denied it ever happened.

Cyril Regan, a former police official who worked on the Beame campaign, has given Bernard Beame's lawyers a statement supporting the younger Beame's denial. But Mr. Boomis has said that Mr. Regan, who was named a vice president of the Off-Track Betting Corporation after the election, was not present when substantive discussions for the deal were held.

Mr. Boomis has said that not long after the meeting he gave Mr. Goldman the checks for $11,000. In addition, he has said, he gave his sister-in-law, Betsy Marsh, and an employee, Victor Lizzul, $5,000 each to contribute in their names to the campaign, and also gave money to friends, including Harvey Rosen, whose extensive political connections link to the William O'Dwyer Administration to buy blocks of tickets to Beame benefits.

Statute of Limitations

The making of contributions through such "fronts" was only a misdemeanor under 1973 state election law and the statute of limitations on such camouflaged gifts has elapsed.

But some criminal lawyers feel that if the District Attorney's office can show that Mr. Boomis was promised a housing project in exchange for his contributions and that an effort was made later to fulfill the promise, the individuals involved could be charged with violating bribery statutes.

Other lawyers, however, including those advising Bernard Beame, have said that bribery statutes can be applied only when a favor is promised and delivered by someone who held public office. Mr. Goldman served briefly as New York City's Cultural Affairs Commissioner, but Bernard Beame has never held a position in his father's administration.

Mr. Boomis has said that he has documents to support his allegation that he was offered a housing project in exchange for his secret contributions. Among them is a 1975 letter from Roger Starr, then the Housing Development Administrator, giving the developer "conditional designation" to build a 50-story apartment tower on urban renewal land north of the World Trade Center.

AT A PARTY: Children of employees of Marriott's Essex House being entertained by Nina and Gregory Fedin, Russian acrobats, at Christmas yesterday. About 320 youngsters received presents from Santa Claus.

Says No One Spoke to Him

Mr. Starr said in interviews last week, however, that no one at City Hall had ever spoken to him about giving Mr. Boomis the designation or about anything else concerning the developer.

The designation, involving a 100,000-square-foot site planned solely for commercial construction, would have required a change in the rezoning plan to permit Mr. Boomis to build a combination apartment tower and department store that he was proposing for the site.

Mr. Starr said during interviews that he was willing to support such a change because the office building market was in the " doldrums," making intended office construction on the site unlikely.

Mr. Boomis is said to have found difficulty raising funds to develop the land after receiving the designation. He has said that Mr. Goldman had promised him the help of the Beame administration in obtaining city, state and Federal financing for his apartment tower at the time the land was offered to him.

But the help never came, and Mr. Boomis began talking about his contributions in political circles to try to pressure the Beame administration, he has said. Shortly afterward he was called to the District Attorney's office, and later he agreed to cooperate with its investigation into his contributions.

Legislature to Confront Same Old Problems Jan. 5

LINDA GREENHOUSE

New York State Legislature will Albany next month to find an answer to the same problems it has faced in some significant cases, under stricter state regulation.

Rent control. This year, taking an election-year path of least resistance, the Legislature simply extended the current rent control laws for another year. That could be done once again in 1977, but there appears to be at least some interest in facing the problem, with a tacit consensus that the current system is unworkable.

Higher education. A special state panel will deliver recommendations early in the session on what Albany's relationship should be to the State University, the City University and the financially troubled private colleges. Some predict that far-reaching changes are in store; at the very least, the state is obliged to re-examine its support for City University because the state's legislation, which advanced state money and allowed the university to reopen, was only a one-year bill.

Court Reorganization. At a special session in August, the Legislature gave first passage to a package of constitutional amendments providing for the appointment of Court of Appeals judges, centralizing court administration and streamlining judicial discipline. The package must be passed again in 1977 and then submitted to the voters in a referendum either next November or in 1978.

The Republicans are inclined to delay their chance to elect a successor to Charles D. Breitler, the chief judge, who is retiring that year. While the chief judge and Governor Carey wanted the referendum in 1977, the Republicans appear to have the upper hand on this issue.

Insurance. The Legislature feels considerable public pressure to do something about the rising costs of both malpractice and automobile insurance. Both areas involve the professional pride of the majority of legislators who are practicing lawyers and both always seem to become more controversial than might be expected.

Capital punishment. In October, a State Supreme Court judge declared the state's three-year-old death penalty unconstitutional.

ability requirements, elimination of categories of services, or other measures is anyone's guess at this point. In addition, there is some desire to bring shared health facilities, the so-called Medicaid mills, under stricter state regulation.

The Republicans are inclined to delay their chance to elect a successor to Charles D. Breitler, the chief judge, who is retiring that year. While the chief judge and Governor Carey wanted the referendum in 1977, the Republicans appear to have the upper hand on this issue.

Insurance. The Legislature feels considerable public pressure to do something about the rising costs of both malpractice and automobile insurance. Both areas involve the professional pride of the majority of legislators who are practicing lawyers and both always seem to become more controversial than might be expected.

Capital punishment. In October, a State Supreme Court judge declared the state's three-year-old death penalty unconstitutional.

tional, and the Court of Appeals is expected to rule soon on another death-penalty case. Although Governor Carey is on record as opposing capital punishment, the leadership of both houses say their members will probably want to re-enact a death penalty at least for killers of police and correctional officers and perhaps for other categories of murderers.

Juvenile justice. This year, the Legislature toughened sentencing procedures for youths found guilty of serious crimes. But since then, a rash of well-publicized crimes by juveniles against the elderly has led many legislators to regard this year's action as only a first step toward stricter treatment of young criminals.

Redlining. The findings, due shortly, of a State Banking Department survey of the mortgage investment policies of the state's banks could lead to renewed efforts to outlaw the alleged practice of redlining, defined as the refusal by banks to grant mortgages in entire neighborhoods regardless of the merits of individual properties. An influential group of Assembly Democrats also want to mandate a specific proportion of in-state investments by New York banks. The Senate Republicans generally oppose these approaches.

Labor. A key provision of the state's Taylor Law, compulsory binding arbitration for police and fire contracts outside New York City, expires next June 30. The unionized service unions want the provision extended and the Carey administration wants to make the contracts subject to approval by local legislative bodies. This could be one of the more bitter fights of the session, with implications for teachers and other public employees.

Rochdale Strike Continues

Rochdale Village in Jamaica, Queens, survived the weekend with no major problems reported because of a strike Friday by its maintenance workers and guards whose picket lines blocked oil delivery trucks. Harold Ireland, controller of the 5,860-unit housing complex, met with the striking Local 80 of the teamsters and James McCabe, a state mediator. The talks were unproductive and will continue this week, Mr. Ireland said. The Rochdale official said the complex had sufficient fuel to last six or seven days.

Cross-County Road Being Rebuilt—Slowly

By EDWARD C. BURKS

On the Cross-County Parkway construction job in Yonkers, it may be that drivers will be going bonkers when they realize that it will take two more years to complete rebuilding of a 4,400-foot stretch of this major artery.

It is one of those rarities—a major through-road running east and west across Westchester County—and work has already been under way for more than a year.

The three-year construction schedule means progress at the rate of 120 feet a month, or for those who really want to be contrary about it, only 4 feet a day. Meanwhile, a heavy load of daily traffic continues to move through the construction site on the old four-lane roadway with its old-fashioned "S" curves and narrow clearances.

But this is a tough job. And no one is dawdling on the project, according to Harry Sakalian, the New York State Transportation Department's project engineer.

Wearing a wool-knit cap and a heavy corduroy jacket against the cold—and puffing occasionally on a long cigar—Mr. Sakalian was explaining in a non-technical terms the other day just why the construction takes so long.

"You got a house," he said, "Well, suppose you're building a new house right where your old one is, and you're doing the job while you continue to occupy the old house and without too much inconvenience to your life. You're maintaining your heating and utilities while you tear down the old house and build the new house at the same time."

Major Problems Detailed

That, in effect, is what the $13.5 million contract on the old stretch of the Cross County Parkway is all about—build a wide new, better-aligned, easy curving six-lane expressway while keeping the old road going and while taking care of a number of other problems.

The contractor, Thalle Construction Company of Briarcliff Manor, is at work between the Saw Mill River Parkway and Seminary Avenue in Yonkers. And, according to Mr. Sakalian, here are some of the items involved in the project:

1. A half-dozen homes on Midland Avenue, adjacent to the parkway, had to be removed to make way for the new alignment, and Midland itself had to be relocated for a stretch.

2. A brick-faced concrete retaining wall will be built to support the new alignment.

3. A new six-lane bridge is under construction to carry the new roadway over Yonkers Avenue.

4. The new roadway has a 200-foot-wide right-of-way, and, with seven tenths of a mile of access and exit ramps, it widens in places to seven or eight lanes. (All of this is to get rid of a long-outdated section of roadway that is a bottleneck and especially dangerous in rain or snow.)

5. A pedestrian overpass, crossing the new wide right-of-way has just been completed so schoolchildren will no longer have to make the hazardous crossing of the busy highway to go to and from Public School 17 on Midland Avenue. (This overpass is covered by an arch-like cyclone fence to prevent any potential rock-throwers from using the vehicles below as targets.)

6. A 20-inch high-pressure gas line and a 135,000-volt electric cable, as well as sewers and telephone lines, had to be relocated and protected from the new roadway.

7. Two buried aqueducts carrying water from upstate reservoirs to New York City pass under the roadway, and special reinforcement measures are necessary. One is the old Croton Aqueduct, dating from the 1830's and no longer in regular use. But to protect the old brick-constructed aqueduct, the contractor is inserting a lining of steel where the aqueduct passes under the highway.

Another Bottleneck

Another work project on the Cross County Parkway that is slowing down traffic is the resurfacing and deck work on the bridge over the Bronx River Parkway.

The Cross County, running from the Saw Mill River Parkway to the Hutchinson, has major importance, according to Mr. Sakalian, because it is one of the few east-west roadways across Westchester.

Major Road Projects Scheduled to Start in '77

Major projects scheduled for starts sometime in 1977 includes the following, according to the Transportation Department:

1. Sprain Brook Parkway extension in Westchester County, from the Cross Westchester Expressway to the Hawthorne Interchange and a link-up with the Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway and the Taconic Parkway, 2.7 miles, including connecting lines.

2. Van Wyck Expressway, Queens. Bids to be opened Jan. 13 on a sophisticated, computer-controlled traffic system covering 3.5 miles of the expressway from the entrance to the Kennedy International Airport near the Belt Parkway northward to Queens Boulevard. There will be 24-hour surveillance of traffic conditions by television monitors and computer-operated signals to control entry to the highway from access ramps and to activate message boards alerting motorists to conditions ahead.

3. Interconnected traffic signal installations at 103 intersections in Mineola, Garden City and Hempstead in Nassau County on Routes 24, 25 and on county roads. Signals will be responsive to traffic flow and controlled by a computer. Bids in 1977.

4. Suffolk County, Reconstruction of State Route 454 (Veterans Memorial Highway) from end to end: 11.1 miles between Routes 25 and 27. Bids in early 1977.

5. Van Wyck Expressway, Queens. Resurfacing bridge on the existing two-lane Nassau Expressway and Northern Boulevard.

6. Improved and new traffic signals in all five boroughs of the city.

7. White Plains. Extensive traffic improvements costing several million dollars and "sophisticated traffic signals" for this Westchester county town.

8. Yonkers. A new four-lane, divided arterial highway, an east-west cross-Westchester roadway, to be built in sections, with the first 2.5 mile section scheduled for bids in 1977. This section is between the Saw Mill River Parkway and the Bronx River Parkway.

9. Poughkeepsie east-west arterial road. A small piece of this Dutchess County road is under construction now. Bids are being opened Dec. 15 on constructing the westbound lanes of this future four-lane divided highway over a eight-tenth of a mile section in Poughkeepsie between Innis Avenue and Hamilton Street.

Painter, 80, Loses 5-Year Battle To Prevent Eviction From Studio

hoff refused to buy it for $33,000, with a $360-a-month maintenance.

"No artist of the classical persuasion, unless he had a rich wife or patron, could afford that price if he were honest," Mr. Werboff said.

The eviction order—the last phase in the legal fight—was reaffirmed by the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court last week, obligating Mr. Werboff alternated between aspects of pain and outrage as he described it yesterday, sitting under the watchful eyes of dozens of his portraits and surrounded by stacks of dozens more.

Some are copies of paintings that hang in palaces, galleries and museums throughout the world. Mr. Werboff proudly showed a visitor a well-worn catalogue of the Prado in Madrid, in which his portrait of the Duke of Alba XVII hangs, and said he was the only living painter to be represented there.

"I am 80 years old," he said in a resonant bass, his king's English vaguely touched by the tones of his native Ukraine. "How long can I last? If God is good to me, maybe three or four or five more years. I don't see why I should lose everything I worked for all my life just because I don't have any rich relatives. It's indecent."

The artist's salt-and-pepper eyebrows moved up and down as he spoke and his eyes glistened. His hands stroked his round face, then ran through his thinning silver hair, and finally thrust before his face in a gesture of bewilderment.

"Where will I go?" he asked. "If I could find anything comparable to this—even slightly comparable—I would go."

The Hotel des Artistes was completed in 1916, and contains 98 apartments. The intent of its developer, Walter Russell, was to construct the grandest artists' accommodations of all. Gradually through the years, it attracted a wider variety of residents, prominent among them Isadora Duncan, Alexander Woolcott, Norman Rockwell, Noel Coward and former Mayor John V. Lindsay, who is still a tenant.

Mr. Werboff's apartment is huge, enough so to seem large despite the paintings, newspaper clippings, books, memorabilia brushes and chairs—dozens of chairs—that are strewn about and stacked everywhere.

The two-story-high living room has a translucent window that is almost two stories high, and perhaps 12 feet wide. It is overlooked by a wooden balcony that serves as a passageway to the three bedrooms, two of which are filled with still more works of art and memorabilia.

Mr. Werboff rose, and with a posture befitting his royal subjects, swept his arm through the air, pointing to his achievements.

"Here is the Princess of Patiala, Kumudech," he said. "And there, the singer Victoria de los Angeles. They were both here."

Then he showed one of his proudest achievements: a series of portraits of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence painted in three crayons, painstakingly recreated from portraits and sketches and busts, with their appearances adjusted to their ages at the time of the signing. Several of the pictures hang from the balcony; others are stacked on an aging sofa.

Elsewhere are portraits of royalty, such as King Gustaf V of Sweden, other men of stature, such as Athanasios I, the late patriarch of the Greek Orthodox Church and dozens more.

And there are walls of books. "Look at my library," Mr. Werboff said. "A library all about art. Do I have to lose all of that?"

Mr. Hillman estimated that holding the apartment, while waiting for Mr. Werboff to move out, cost him about $600 a month—the difference between what the artist pays and the lawyer's maintenance, co-op assessment and mortgage-interest charges.

He said that he had attempted, early in the negotiations over the apartment, to find Mr. Werboff another place to live, but that "he refused to look at anything else."

"What Mr. Werboff has been doing is living within my means for the past five years," Mr. Hillman said. "He's not living within his own."

MEMPHIS, Dec. 12 (UPI)—Two explosions caused by a leak of underground natural gas hurled chunks of concrete three stories high in a mall area on the campus of Memphis State University today. New York Reduces Costs of Running Day-Care Centers

By PETER KIHSS

At a time of general cost inflation, New York City's spending on day-care programs has been reduced—from an average of $74 a week a child last June 30 to $63 currently, according to the Agency for Child Development.

In a report to Mayor Beame, the agency reported a general tightening up that had in large part corrected the deficiencies noted by a mayoral task force last March. The earlier report had charged the program with "incompetence," potential ineligibility among 40 percent of children served and a possible deficit that would lose $52 million to $80 million in state and Federal funds.

Lewis Frankfort, who took over as interim executive director March 23 and was named director Oct. 12, reported that the deficit to be borne out of city tax funds had been cut so far to $6 million to $8 million.

A special recertification effort, he said, had found and removed 7,300 children, or 16 percent of the March caseload, as ineligible.

Staffing Funds Cut

Nevertheless the reduction in average costs, Mr. Frankfort reported, "was achieved for the most part at considerable loss to the individual day-care programs" by eliminating important staffing and nonpersonnel funds.

Even now, he said, one-third of the programs still cost more than $65, a proportion that was down from 36 percent last year. Because the state has barred state-Federal reimbursement for individual costs above $65 since April 1, he said, the city Human Resources Administration may have to shoulder nearly $4 million this year through city taxes.

The individual $65 limit, Mr. Frankfort contended, was "unrealistic" in failing to recognize "high personnel and occupancy costs associated with New York City's unique 10-hour day-care programs."

The city has appealed to raise the individual limit to $70 or to allow use of a citywide average of $65. The new report contended that further significant cuts in reimbursing programs were "not feasible," and that requiring some to bear their own expenses above $65 would "drive a considerable number" out of operation when they already are "having difficulty surviving."

The new report said almost all children who were displaced when the city last June removed all public funds from 48 centers. It said 125 former family counselors had been placed as eligibility workers in a new centralized intake system.

The economy moves reduced public financing by $34 million from last year to $116.2 million for the current fiscal year, with about 36,000 children being served in 345 group day care centers.

The state had withheld substantial state-Federal reimbursement for centers failing to meet licensing requirements and threatened to refuse any reimbursement after last July 1. The new report said all but five centers obtained licenses as of that date and the threat was removed for the present.

To cope with state attendance requirements—which the report complained fail to recognize problems of young children served—the city has called on programs to enroll children at 110 percent of budget capacity "or risk underutilization disallowances." By the end of October, citywide enrollment was up to 107 percent.

The new report also recounted actions taken against the much-criticized leases entered into directly by the city for 171 centers. Mr. Frankfort called the direct-lease program "one of the most poorly planned and cost-ineffective ventures" ever undertaken by the city in social services.

BEAME VOWS FREEZE ON REALTY TAX RATE

rate might drop a bit but that the promise meant that under no circumstances would it rise.

The current real-estate tax rate is $8.795 for each $100 of assessed valuation, up 60.8 cents from the previous year. The tax will bring in some $3.3 billion toward the city's $13 billion budget.

Next year's rate will be determined by the size and composition of next year's budget. The Beame administration also has been trying to devise a change in the way the city calculates the rate, by taking into account the likely level of tax delinquencies.

But whatever the rate turns out to be, the Mayor said yesterday, he is promising to let it go no higher through 1981.

He arrived five minutes late for his taping session at the WABC studio at 1 West 67th Street, volunteered his "capping" pledge early in the half-hour show, then fenced pleasantly with his television questioners and with a cluster of reporters afterwards about the possible political implications of the promise and the financing techniques by which he proposed to achieve it.

There are "imponderables," he said, noting that he and other Mayors are to meet with President-elect Jimmy Carter tomorrow to talk over urban programs.

What did Mr. Carter owe Mr. Beame for his early support of the Carter candidacy?

"He owes me nothing," Mr. Beame said crisply. "He owes the people of New York City a lot, and I think he knows it."

On Wednesday, the Mayor said, there will be a meeting with the lawyer for the Flushing National Bank, which persuaded the Court of Appeals to overturn the "moratorium" on $1 billion in short-term city loans and order their repayment. The court set no deadline, but representatives of the city and the Municipal Assistance Corporation have decided to present a repayment plan by Dec. 15.

"We'll present a complete plan," Mr. Beame said, but he did not say what it would be.

On the show, he also said that Washington should give New York City more money to fight drug abuse, recalled a pledge by President-elect Carter to establish a "mass transit trust fund" and said that Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd was doing "a remarkable job under difficult circumstances—and he's going to continue to do it."

But mostly he talked about money—specifically his long-range plan.

Financially, he said, "we certainly anticipate no cutbacks in Federal aid." At the same time, he added, his proposal does not count on any new aid "at this time" from the Federal Government.

The Mayor said that a 1977 re-election campaign was so far from his thoughts "that I haven't even discussed it with my family."

But Mr. Beame, a former City Budget Director and Comptroller, spoke briefly about what it had been like being out of public office after John V. Lindsay beat him in the 1965 mayoral election. Four years later he came back as Comptroller and to himself for his successful 1973 race.

In the four years out of office, Beame said, he found that although he could make twice as much money as he could in office, "it wasn't enough challenge." He could stay away from office three days and return to find nothing much had changed, he said. "Public service," he said, "is in my blood."

Handwritten note: "J.S. Intelligence Officials Apprehensive of New Shake-Ups Under Carter"

J.S. Intelligence Officials Apprehensive of New Shake-Ups Under Carter

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—United States intelligence officials, who say they have just recovered from the demoralizing effects of Congressional investigation and closure of past misdeeds, are facing an accession of President-elect Jimmy Carter with apprehension about the possibility of new organizational shakeups. The consensus of William E. Colby, former Director of Central Intelligence, his successor, George Bush, and other top United States intelligence officials interviewed in the last two weeks is that there have been enough changes lately.

They note that the Central Intelligence Agency, under Mr. Carter, will be getting a fifth director in less than five years, the Defense Intelligence Agency is being under its third director in the period and that both agencies have undergone major reorganizations and personnel cutbacks.

Turnover Called Disruptive
The turnover has been disruptive, a National Security Council official has had extensive experience in the intelligence service—a sentiment widely held in the field.

He professional point-out, for example, that James K. Schlesinger dismissed 10 C.I.A. employees in his nine-month term of office in 1972 and made sharp internal reforms.

Upon succeeding Mr. Schlesinger, Mr. Ford was expected to devote the bulk of his two-year term to appearances on Capitol Hill to testify about the agency's covert operations, including assassination plots and mail openings. Just as hearings drew to a close, Mr. Colby replaced by Mr. Bush.

His man brought his own men into top echelons. "We are resilient," a time agency officer commented, "nobody can go through all that without some damage."

Still, there are strong signs that the President may do just as feared: he will keep up the 48,000 men and women who constitute the core of the intelligence community.

Separation of Job Proposed
The latest proposal is that Mr. Carter split the job of Director of Central Intelligence from that of the director of C.I.A., a dual function that dates to the inception of the Agency in 1949.

Under the proposal, the director of the intelligence community—a policy-making role—would be unburdened of the actual task of managing the huge establishment in McLean, Va., and would be untainted by institutional loyalty.

The proposal has strong support from President-elect Walter F. Mondale, who was a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence until last summer and is now advising Mr. Carter on intelligence policy.

The Select Committee recommended the division of responsibilities in its final report last spring, and the chairman of the committee, Senator Daniel K. Inoué, Democrat of Hawaii, also favors an interview recently, Senator Inoué said he felt that "one of the weaknesses of the present system is that the director of Central Intelligence is in charge of C.I.A."

the Senate committee also intends to have a voice in the intelligence budget discussions and has formed a special subcommittee to deal with resource allocations. Previously, the intelligence budget was routinely approved in great secrecy by a handful of senior Senate and House committee chairmen.

Under Mr. Bush, the C.I.A. has sought to meet the pressure for organizational change, including the threatened split of director functions, with some shifts at the top.

He appointed Daniel Murphy, a four-star admiral, as his deputy for intelligence community affairs to supervise liaison with the Defense Intelligence Service, the National Security Agency, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the State Department and the Energy Research and Development Administration.

His other deputy, Erno Henry Koche, oversees the daily operations of the intelligence agency, freeing Mr. Bush for appearances before Congressional oversight committees, reports to the President and other aspects of his responsibility.

The arrangement is apparently functioning to the satisfaction of all the intelligence agencies, to judge from interviews across the community. In addition, despite their short tenure, Mr. Bush, Admiral Murphy and Mr. Koche have received plaudits from current and retired intelligence officers and from Mr. Carter.

However, nobody in Washington, including David Aaron, the President-elect's own transition team chief for national security, knows at this point exactly how Mr. Carter intends to align the intelligence community in his administration.

Briefed on Covert Operations
The President-elect was described by C.I.A. officials who briefed him last month as "fascinated on covert action" operations of the agency—the agency's sorest flank during 18 months of Senate and House investigations in 1975 and 1976.

His agency briefers told Mr. Carter, however, that covert operations now cost "only 1.7 percent" of the agency's total budget, as opposed to "over 50 percent" at the height of the cold war.

Despite public exhortations of past covert action programs by Mr. Mondale, the intelligence community is proceeding on the assumption that the Carter administration will want to retain paramilitary and clandestine capabilities, Mr. Koche said in an interview.

Talking to newsmen Friday, Gregg Schneiders, who handles appointments for Mr. Carter, said it was his understanding of his chief's views that covert operations were "a necessary part" of the agency's work. He added, however, that "there will not be any covert military operations."

Mr. Schneiders hinted, furthermore, that Mr. Carter opposed proposals from outside the intelligence community that the C.I.A. be divided up and re-established under a different name.

Proposal of Ex-C.I.A. Aide
The latest version of the proposal was made by Ray S. Cline, a former deputy director of the agency, in his book, "Secrets, Spies and Scoundrels." Mr. Cline recommended peeling off the agency's clandestine services and "secreting" them in other Government departments. He would then reconstitute the analytical and intelligence branches into a "Central Institute for Foreign Affairs Research."

Asked to address this proposal, Mr. Schneiders said that he "would not think" this was in the works.

The idea of splitting up the agency is alien to most of intelligence specialists who were interviewed.

"Separation from the clandestine branches further isolates the analysts, and the farther away they are from the smell of a problem the more artificial their judgment," said Mr. Colby.

Improvement of intelligence analysis is a top concern at the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Senate Select Committee and the Carter transition team.

'Warehouses of Information'
At Defense Intelligence Agency it is a problem described by Mr. Koche as "warehouses of information to digest" resulting from the prodigious flow of signals and photo reconnaissance data picked up by the new spy satellites and electronic monitoring devices targeted on the Soviet Union and other potential adversaries.

The agency's new Director, Lieut. Gen. Samuel Wilson, and Robert Ellsworth, Deputy Secretary of Defense, have introduced a fortnightly meeting at the Pentagon of "consumers and producers" of intelligence to sharpen the focus of analytical work.

They have also attempted to improve analysis by making intelligence careers more rewarding for the 1,800 military men and the 2,700 civilians of the defense agency.

General Wilson said recently that he felt that "the drama" of intelligence work had shifted from the point of collection to the headquarters where data are subjected to the "study of synergies"—the discovery of pieces of information that substance each other when brought together.

Science and Weapons Study Moved
At Central Intelligence, Mr. Bush and Mr. Koche have also restructured some of the 15,000-member agency's analysis work, moving the science and weapons analysis sections out of the Science and Technology Directorate and into the Directorate of Intelligence.

Mr. Bush said in an interview that he had also begun a process of "centralization of the C.I.A." through closer integration of "the four fiefdoms"—the directorates of intelligence, of operations, of science and of technology and of administration.

At the Senate Select Committee there is also an effort to monitor the quality of intelligence analysis on a regular basis through a new subcommittee.

According to James Angleton, a veteran of the clandestine services who retired in 1975, quality control by the Congress was tentatively begun and then abandoned by the House Select Committee on Intelligence under Representative Otis G. Pike, Democrat of Suffolk.

Seven Congressional Panels
Congressional handling of intelligence policies may also come to plague Mr. Carter's administration as it did Mr. Ford's, for there are still seven committees of the Congress empowered to investigate intelligence operations and receive intelligence briefings.

Senator Inoué would like to consolidate the Congressional committees, perhaps even explore the efficiency of a joint Senate-House select committee. But jealousies and a sense of traditional prerogatives may prevail, leaving the plethora of investigators.

As for Mr. Carter's own intentions regarding the intelligence community, a Central Intelligence Agency official who briefed him came away with the impression that "there would be no bombshelling or lightning-like thrust—and only a reorganization after consultation of the professionals."

What kind of intelligence director will Mr. Carter pick, a professional or someone who is not but whom he knows personally?

George Bush said he pleaded with Mr. Carter last month in Plains, Ga., to choose a man he knows well and trusts, ruling himself out on the first count and thus paving the way for his resignation. Mr. Carter apparently accepted that counsel.

Mr. Carter said in a television interview that the Director of Central Intelligence should be changed with each new administration because a "continuing hierarchy" in the intelligence community could create "some danger."

His administration will thus become the first, it appears, to remove the directorship of the agency from the career intelligence track it has been on since its inception. It is a change that some professionals view with considerable misgivings because it would seem to introduce a tinge of partisan politics into a branch of the Government they feel should be separated from partisanship.

New York City's Fiscal Experts Tempering Optimism With Caution

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

The Beame administration, faced with a three-week deadline to show how it will balance the city's budget next year, has now identified some potential new savings that may soften the need for the drastic cuts in services that have been feared for the last several months.

On the other hand, budget officials are cautioning that the city's spending picture could worsen as a result of adverse developments in the weeks and months ahead—chiefly, rising costs from energy, pensions, welfare and Medicaid, or from cutbacks in state assistance.

This appraisal of the city's budget situation was gleaned from interviews with fiscal aides in the last few days, many of whom expressed a perhaps surprising amount of optimism.

"We still expect there will have to be budget cuts," said Donald Kummerfeld, the city's Budget Director. "But we're working hard on a package of credible, realistic proposals showing how we can balance the budget next year without the severe cuts that everybody thought might be necessary. We are not smug, self-satisfied or even highly optimistic. But I'm hopeful we can do it."

"The third-year problem is a serious one, but it shouldn't be exaggerated," said Harrison J. Goldin, the City Comptroller, referring to the fact that the next fiscal year is the third and final year in the timetable requiring the city to close its deficit.

"A lot of possibilities are available to close our deficit without further cuts," Mr. Goldin said. "They haven't firmed up yet, but if they fall into place, they would make the budget far more manageable than we had thought in the past."

As it stands now, the city faces a deficit of about $500 million for the year beginning next July 1, a deficit that both Federal and state law require the city to close. The magnitude of the gap can be measured by the fact that all the reductions that the city will have achieved in the previous two years amount to $600 million.

What remains to be done, in other words, is nearly equal to what has been done since the crisis began a year ago last spring—a chilling thought even to fiscal officials.

Lately, however—particularly since the election of Jimmy Carter—aides in the Beame administration have identified some ways that money might be saved without cutting services.

Examples Are Cited

The following are some examples:

¶ If Washington approves the full amount of counter-cyclical-revenue sharing, the city has a chance to get perhaps $17 million it had not been counting on next year.

¶ There is growing optimism among Beame aides that the Federal Government will approve the Westway, the proposed six-lane Interstate System highway that would run from the Battery to 42d Street on the West Side of Manhattan. An approval would channel an immediate $75 million, at least, into the city's treasury for use in softening budget cuts—payment for the city-owned property on which Westway would be built.

¶ The city's experience in speeding collections of state and Federal aid could lead it to propose a reduction in the required $125 million reserve for so-called disallowances of aid payments. A reduction of $25 million in the reserve could make that much money available to close the deficit.

¶ The Federal Government might be persuaded to allow the city to use its $50 million capital grant appropriation next year for operating expenses.

¶ In one of the trickier possibilities being explored, the city is looking at ways of reducing debt service by as much as $75 million—through postponement of borrowing and Federal reimbursement for the retirement of city sewer bonds—without bringing about a reduction in the real estate tax, as normally required when the debt service goes down.

¶ Finally, the city would accept $200 million next year from an agreement by the municipal employee pension funds and the New York City banks—which own $1.8 billion of Municipal Assistance

Corporation bonds—to defer the city's payment of principal on the bonds for five years.

But there are many problems that city officials point to.

A price increase by the oil-producing nations could force the city's energy costs up by perhaps $20 million.

The city actuary has not yet projected what the city will have to pay for pensions next year, and Mr. Kummerfeld said the cost could go up, although by less than $50 million.

City officials are especially afraid of two major problems, however: a rise in welfare and Medicaid costs of perhaps $100 million, and the reduction in state aid, which may have been signaled by Governor Carey when he announced last week that the state faced a $1 billion gap in its budget next year.

But even the state's problems could have a way of turning out well city's budget. If the state moves welfare and Medicaid costs, then it would stand to benefit, because it would not have to make the public payments required for public aid.

Finally, there are fears that the budget to redeem some of the $1 billion in short-term notes that were from a legislatively imposed moratorium has now been declared unconstitutional.

There is also the fear of "all in the regular spending cuts" and that the Health and Hospitals Corp. still projects a deficit of $160 million—over and above the deficit city at large—and the Transit Authority projects a gap at least half that.

These dark clouds hanging over city's finances prevent budgeting from indulging in flat-out optimism.

limited by its need to maintain revenues to support essential services, and the requirement of state and Federal aid to bring its budget into balance by 1978. To achieve a balance, new tax cuts of $500 million must be made in the coming fiscal year.

The Temporary Commission proposed that the city do the following:

- Reduce the business income tax from current rate of 10.05 percent to 5 percent.
- Eliminate the 4 percent sales tax on machinery, equipment, fuel and utilities.
- Encourage new investment by allowing a credit against business income taxes of 10 percent of the cost of new machinery, equipment and buildings.
- Reduce the commercial rent tax from its current graduated rates ranging up to 7.5 percent on rents over $11,500 a year, to a rate of 2.5 percent of rentals above $100 a year.
- Increase from 50 percent to 95 percent the real estate tax abatement allowed on the value of new factory buildings, and extend the period of abatement from 10 to 15 years.

The Commission's Findings

In an 85-page study—the ninth it has done for the Mayor—the commission found that manufacturing was more sensitive to taxation than service industries; the level of taxation on manufacturing was higher in New York than it was in most other places; that an accelerated decline in factory employment in the city followed the imposition of the business income tax in 1966 as a substitute for the gross receipts tax, and that cutting the tax could be an effective way of stopping the decline.

The commission said that action to limit manufacturing in the city was essential because so large a part of New York's population was unskilled and uneducated and could not get jobs in the higher office and service sections of local economy.

The continued decline in goods production will condemn a great number of people who are desirous and capable of working to lives of permanent, degrading idleness at public expense," the report said. "The real tragedy of the decline of the manufacturing sector lies not in what it means in terms of lost revenue, balanced budgets or financial plans, but what it means to the men and women of this city, who ask for nothing more than a job."

Those jobs have been disappearing in New York and in other older cities at an accelerating rate. From 1950 to 1960, the number of factory jobs in New York dropped 0.9 percent, from 1,038,900 to 946,000. In the 1960's, the rate of decline increased to 2.1 percent as the number of jobs fell to 788,200.

From 1970 to 1975 the rate of decline increased again, to 7.2 percent, and the total dropped to 527,000.

These declines have been accompanied by corresponding drops in the number of manufacturing establishments in the city. From 1960 to 1974, for example, the number of concerns fell 37.4 percent, from 38,000 to 22,500.

The commission said there were many causes for these declines. Among them were high land, labor and energy costs, growth of transportation facilities in other parts of the country, which lessened one of New York's early advantages, and the spread of population to the West and the South.

It did not mention the competition of low-wage industries overseas, which many economists believe to be the prime cause of the decline of labor-intensive New York industries such as the manufacture of garments, toys, novelties and electrical goods.

Rather, the report focused on the tax structure, and it found that while New York State was "a reasonably hospitable location" for manufacturing, New York City places "a particularly heavy burden on local manufacturing."

It pointed out that New York is one of only a few cities in the country that impose a business income tax. Moreover, the rate in New York, 10.05 percent, is higher by a wide margin than that of any other city in the country.

Considering the total tax cost of carrying on manufacturing in New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Indiana, the study found that for a hypothetical company it called the Sisyphus Corporation, with annual sales of $10 million, the liability would be 32 percent higher in White Plains than it would be in Honey Creek, Ind., but 114 percent higher in New York City than in White Plains.

The commission also found a high degree of correlation between the tax burden imposed on manufacturing and the amount of manufacturing carried on in the various states. That is, states with a higher than-average level of taxation tended to have a lower than average number of employees in manufacturing. It cited this correlation in support of its thesis that factory employers tend to settle in places where their tax costs are low, although that is only one of several factors that determine where factories are situated.

1974 Study Is Noted

The report gives particular weight to a 1974 study done for the city's Budget Bureau, which showed what happened to factory employment in the city after the imposition of the business income tax in 1966.

Before that year, the principal tax on business was the gross receipts tax, a levy on the sales of all companies doing business in the city. This was thought to be especially hurtful to manufacturers who spent large sums on labor but had small profit margins.

The business income tax, by contrast, was levied only on profits, and at first it was thought that this would lessen the burden on the ailing apparel industry and on other declining labor-intensive industries. However, the rate of the new tax was set so high—at 5.5 percent—that it actually subjected manufacturers to a higher tax liability than they had been sustaining before.

The Budget Bureau study found that the added tax burden caused the city to lose 44,500 more factory jobs than it would have otherwise between 1966 and 1971. When the tax rate was raised to 6.7 percent in 1971, there was a further loss of 53,400 jobs. And, using the same formulas, the commission projected that the 1975 rise in the rate to 10.05 percent would cost the city 149,000 more jobs by 1981.

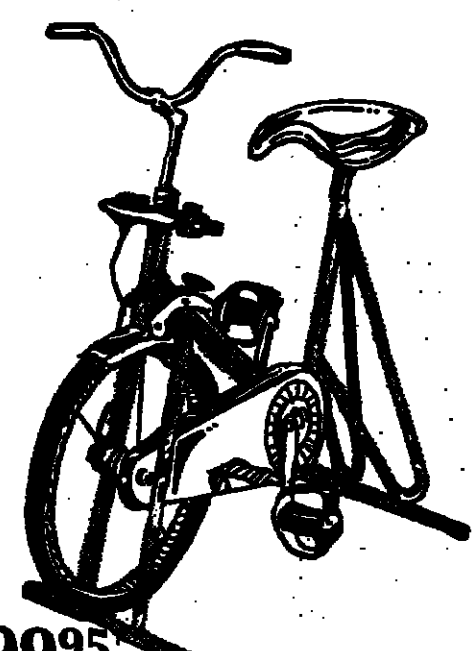

For this reason, the commission said, its proposal to reduce the rate of the business income tax to 5 percent was its most important recommendation. But it added that it did not intend its program to be a shopping list from which legislators could choose what they wanted. Rather, it said, the whole of the program would have to be adopted to make sure it would have a reasonable chance for success.

The report said there could be no assurance that cutting taxes would bring back the jobs that adding taxes drove away—that is, that the process was reversible. It pointed out that the economy has deteriorated, that the fiscal condition of New York was still perilous, that energy costs had risen sharply and that crime and security problems had intensified. Moreover, it said that the confidence of businessmen in government had been shaken and that they might not believe that tax cuts, even if they were made, would be made permanently.

All of these factors could lessen the benefits that the city would receive from cutting taxes. Nevertheless, the commission said, the effort must be made if the city is to survive. It concluded:

"It is the commission's belief that economic development is the paramount issue facing New York City. Without stabilization of the city's economy, the city's long-term financial problems will not be solved."

A Little Weightlifting to Get Into Feminine Shape

By SHARON JOHNSON
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES—Tina Rocca has done it all. The 108-pound brunette has raced two miles a day for four years, slammed tennis balls until her arm ached, and spent hours practicing modern dance. So it was not surprising that she started lifting weights at the Mid-Valley Young Men's Christian Association in Van Nuys, Calif.

"Weightlifting is the newest trend in women's exercise," said Miss Rocca as she thrust a 60-pound barbell above her head. "Women are discovering what men have known for years—there is nothing better than weightlifting for conditioning the body and losing weight."

Miss Rocca, an amateur tennis player, got interested in the sport two years ago because she wanted to increase the strength of her arms.

"I endured a lot of kidding from the men weightlifters in the beginning," she said softly. "They all acted as though weightlifting was the last bastion of male chauvinism. They kept insinuating that I should be off chitchatting with the other high school girls instead of spending my time doing toe raises and chest presses."

Although she could barely lift a five-pound barbell at first, Miss Rocca persisted. Now the 19-year-old college sophomore can lift 115 pounds, a feat that many of her male detractors cannot match.

More importantly, Miss Rocca's backhand has improved so much that she is now beating once formidable opponents on the tennis court.

Unlike Miss Rocca, Roberta, a buxom brunette in her early forties, started lifting weights four years ago as "a last ditch effort to lose weight."

Other Methods Failed

"I must have spent $20,000 on everything from health spas to hormone injections but I never seemed to be able to lose the 40 pounds I had gained during my pregnancy," she explained. "In a fit of desperation, I threw myself into weightlifting after I read a magazine article about it. In a matter of months, I got my figure back."

Roberta has never told her husband or son that she lifts weights because she is afraid that they will tease her about "becoming an Amazon." Instead she tells them that she takes ballet lessons.

"Most people think of a man with bulging muscles when they think of a weightlifter," she explained, catching her breath after a 40-minute workout. "They feel that a woman has to lose her femininity to take up weightlifting. Few people can accept the fact that weightlifting is just another sport like gymnastics or calisthenics."

In fact, according to Dale Adrian, diet and fitness instructor at the Mid-Valley Y.M.C.A., women need not worry about losing their feminine curves because no matter how many weights they lift, they will never develop the dimensions of musclesmen.

"Women lack the male hormone testosterone, which is responsible for these dimensions," Mr. Adrian said. "All weightlifting can do for women is contour their bodies—give them a firmer waist and bust and better muscle tone."

Limited Chances for Exercise

About 200 slim, well-groomed women come to the Mid-Valley Y.M.C.A. twice a week to work out with weights. Like most Southern Californians, they have deep tans and are intent on improving their appearances. They range in age from a 17-year-old soccer player to a 60-year-old grandmother. The most striking members of the class are professional dancers and models who crowd weightlifting into their schedules along with voice and dance lessons.

Most of the participants are housewives or office workers whose daily lives offer them few opportunities for exercise, although a few hold down physically demanding jobs as truck drivers and freight handlers. Two unemployed women joined the "Y" last fall in hopes that the weightlifting would enable them to pass the grueling physical examinations that are required to qualify as a Los Angeles policeman or fireman.

"The women's liberation movement is responsible for the great increase in the number of women weightlifters," said Mr. Adrian. "Two years ago, there were only a few hundred women interested in the sport but now there are about 10,000 in the United States. Most of the increase has come from women under 25 who weren't crushed by the old stereotypes in sports. Today women are much freer and more accepting of the idea that there is no such thing as a masculine or feminine sport."

Typical of this attitude is Lisa Cravite, a high school senior from Sherman Oaks, Calif. She started lifting weights three years ago because her track coach said it would help her do better as a discus thrower.

"I feel that any sport is open to me today," said Miss Cravite. "I like weightlifting because it has increased my flexibility and endurance. I feel that if men can lift weights, why cannot I?"

Mr. Adrian, who won the Mr. America title in 1975, believes that women are more serious than men about weightlifting.

"Most of the men want results in the first three months and if they don't get them, they quit," he explained. "Men aren't as diligent as are women and spend much more time fooling around and talking."

Other Weightlifting Classes

The Mid-Valley Y.M.C.A. is one of 25 in the Los Angeles area that has welcomed women weightlifters. At the University of California at Los Angeles 200 women are enrolled in weightlifting classes, and at the North Hollywood Health Club 150 women are taught weightlifting by Shirley Patterson, a 40-year-old grandmother who has been lifting weights since 1958.

"Women and men weightlifters have different goals," said Mrs. Patterson who has lifted weights as heavy as 225 pounds in various competitions. "Men generally want to lift heavier and heavier weights as an exercise in strength while women use weights as a means to an end—conditioning the body."

The 5-foot-tall, 112-pound Mrs. Patterson generally has the women start by lifting an eight-pound weight. Soon, most are working with 25-pound weights. She encourages them to work out at least three times a week because sporadic exercise accomplishes little.

"The immediate effects are a better contoured body, but the long-range effects are even more important," said Mrs. Patterson. "They feel better and, besides, weightlifting lets them prove to themselves that they are strong, vibrant, and very much of females in a sport that should have as many women as men."

Seejeh: New Game 2,350 Years Old

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

The newest game around is one of the oldest.

Atop a carved chest in the hallway of her home in Washington, Judith Rosenfeld, a self-proclaimed "archeology nut," has the game board to prove it—a pitted, uneven slab of yellowish limestone inscribed with 21 squares and the Greek letter pi. She believes it is well beyond 2,000 years old.

It is the inspiration for a game called Seejeh, manufactured in Israel and introduced in the United States by Leisure Learning products of Greenwich, Conn.

The name is derived from a Persian reference to 30 pieces. A little like chess, a little like checkers, Seejeh is played with plastic pieces moved over the squares on the board in an effort to trap an opponent's pieces.

The board introduced here is based on a photocopy of the limestone slab found on a path by Mrs. Rosenfeld's son Michael and a friend several years ago when she went out with them to visit an inactive archeological dig at Megiddo—the biblical Armageddon.

"They turned it over and instantly both of them recognized it as an ancient game," she said. "They had unearthed such a thing in the Canaanite ruin they had been digging in that summer. So I confess to you, we pinched it. It was dirty, heavy and we felt very wicked."

Mrs. Rosenfeld hastened to assert that the artifact possessed little archeological value since it had been dislodged from the multilevel Megiddo ruins, making it impossible to link to a layer in such a way that would enable scholars to identify its period with precision. "The site was permanently abandoned in 350 B.C.," she said, "so it had to be earlier than that."

She went on, "The kids took it to one of the archeologists who had been on the dig, who at first thought they had scratched it themselves. Then they remembered they had heard such games had been—were still being—played."

The next step, Mrs. Rosenfeld said, was a trip into the Negev, where, within a single day, with the help of the army and of other individuals familiar with its inhabitants, Bedouins were found who were still playing the game.

"They play it on a bowl of sand which they indent, and they use goat dung and pebbles," she said.

Mrs. Rosenfeld's next step was to head for a tombstone maker, who carved her a game board, which was then photographed. Then with her husband, a newsman, and their three children, she began playing the game and setting down the rules.

The Bedouins, she said, have no recorded rules, although they do have a lot of time to play the game. So the rules of Seejeh, she said, "are the Bedouin rules, but speeded up and modified."

When the Rosenfeld family returned to the United States, Mrs. Rosenfeld set about trying to interest various companies in manufacturing the game. Negotiations with several concerns foundered for various reasons, including, in one case, a fear that Americans would not accept a game played by Arabs.

"Coming as we did from Israel," Mrs. Rosenfeld said, "we were not aware of the prejudice that a great many Americans have against the Arabs. That sounds funny, it's true. The Israelis don't have the same attitude. They know Arabs. There are lots of individual friendships."

The problem was solved when the Rosenfelds returned to Israel for a summer vacation two years ago. The game was taken to a firm called Or Da.

"They just fell on it immediately," Mrs. Rosenfeld said.

Manufacturing by Or Da started about a year and a half ago, with the letter pi on the board changed by Mrs. Rosenfeld to an X. "First because it reminded me of geometry, which I hated. Secondly, because it necessitated too many explanations. What I want to know is: Why did they use it?"

Now when she looks at the limestone, she said, "I have visions of soldiers sitting around at night and picking up a piece of rubble from the latest conquest or a couple of hundred years earlier and scratching a game into it."

Nowadays, thanks to Mrs. Rosenfeld, change is taking place in the desert. Or Da, she has been informed, is trying to get its hands on a videotape that shows Mrs. Rosenfeld's version of the game being played in the desert by fully robed Arabs.

"Let's face it," she said. "Plastic beats sheep dung every time."

Recipe for a 'Salade Russe' With Aspic

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

A short while ago, we wrote an article detailing the menu offered by the proprietor of the Commune Chez Soi restaurant in Brussels on the occasion of that establishment's 50th birthday. The hors d'oeuvre on that evening was listed as la terrine de légumes sauce cressonnette, a vegetable "loaf" in aspic served with watercress mayonnaise.

It was also served with a delectable spoon of fresh foie gras on the side. The vegetable dish—green beans, green peas, carrots, turnips and so on—was a toothsome, interesting creation, but we did think it a bit modest for such an otherwise stately affair.

In any event, we received a letter from E. Ramon Arango of the political science department of Louisiana State University telling us that he likes "vegetables and I like aspics and the combination of the two with a watercress sauce sounds appealing." Is there any way, he asks, to obtain the recipe?

We re-created the dish in our home kitchen. In effect, a sort of salade russe held together with clear aspic, rather than mayonnaise, the mayonnaise with watercress, as noted, was served separately. For the record, here is that recipe:

VEGETABLE LOAF IN ASPIC WITH WATERCRESS SAUCE

- 4 trimmed ribs of celery, about eight and one-half inches each
- 1/2 pound fresh asparagus, eight to 12 stalks
- 2 carrots, trimmed and scraped
- 1 medium-size white turnip, trimmed and peeled
- 1/2 pound tender young green beans, ends trimmed
- Salt to taste
- 3/4 cup fresh or frozen green peas

Quick tarragon aspic made with four cups of liquid (see recipe)

- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh tarragon or half the amount dried.

1. Prepare the vegetables for cooking and have them ready. Keep them in separate batches.

2. Split the celery ribs lengthwise into half-inch strips.

3. Trim off and discard the tough bottoms from the asparagus. Scrape the sides of the asparagus, starting about two inches from the tip.

4. Cut the carrots lengthwise into half-inch or slightly smaller strips.

5. Cut the turnip into approximately 16 pieces resembling french-fried potatoes.

6. In a deep skillet, bring a large quantity of water to the boil. Add salt to taste. This will be used to cook each batch of vegetables, except the green peas, one batch at a time.

7. Cook the green beans about 10 minutes or until tender. Remove the beans and chill. Let the water continue to boil.

8. Similarly cook the celery seven minutes; drain and chill. Cook the asparagus five minutes; drain and chill. Cook the turnip five minutes; drain and chill.

9. Using another saucepan, add the green peas to boiling salted water and cook briefly until tender. Drain and chill.

10. Prepare the aspic in advance and let it cool. When ready to use, it should be at room temperature or slightly cooler but still liquid. If the aspic starts to set, it may be left to melt slowly over gentle heat.

11. Place a 9-by-5-by-2 1/4-inch pan in the refrigerator or freezer. When it is chilled, add a layer, about one-quarter inch thick, of liquid aspic. Chill until the aspic sets.

12. Arrange neat rows of the prepared vegetables over the aspic, close to but not touching the sides or sides of the mold. Add another layer of aspic, just enough to barely cover the layer of vegetables. Chill until set. Add another layer of vegetables, another coating of aspic and chill. Continue until all the vegetables are used, ending with a coating of aspic. Cover with plastic wrap and chill overnight. Unmold and sprinkle with chopped watercress sauce.

Yield: Eight to 10 servings.

Note: At Commune Chez Soi in Brussels this dish was served with a slice of fresh foie gras on the side. This is excellent. Cold poached fish or poached chicken would also be agreeable.

QUICK TARRAGON ASPIC

- 3 cups chicken broth
- 1 cup tomato juice
- 4 envelopes unflavored gelatin
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

- 1 teaspoon sugar
- 2 egg shells, crushed
- 2 egg whites, lightly beaten
- 2 tablespoons cognac
- 1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh tarragon or half the amount dried.

1. In a saucepan combine the chicken broth with the tomato juice, gelatin, salt, pepper, sugar, egg shells and egg whites and heat slowly, stirring constantly, until the mixture boils up in the pan.

2. Remove the pan from the heat and stir in the cognac.

3. Strain the mixture through a sieve lined with a flannel cloth that has been rinsed in cold water and wrung out. Add the tarragon. If the aspic starts to set or becomes too firm, it may be reheated, then brought to any desired temperature.

Yield: About one quart.

WATERCRESS SAUCE

- 1 tablespoon prepared imported mustard such as Dijon or Dusseldorf
- 1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
- Salt to taste
- 3 drops Tabasco sauce
- 1 egg yolk
- 1 cup peanut or olive oil or a mixture of both
- Lemon juice to taste

- 2 tablespoons heavy cream
- 1/2 cup chopped fresh watercress

1. Combine the mustard, vinegar, salt and Tabasco in a mixing bowl. Add the yolk and stir rapidly with a wire whisk. When blended, start adding the oil, stirring rapidly with the whisk.

2. Add cream salt to taste and lemon juice to taste. Beat in the cream. Stir in the watercress and serve.

Was an Assistant U.S. Attorney Told to 'Get' Roy Cohn?

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

The meeting—a footnote to history—may or may not have taken place 15 years ago.

In recent weeks, that meeting—real or imaginary—has become the subject of some of the angriest fulminations in the New York legal community in years.

At issue is: Was an assistant United States attorney told to "get" Roy M. Cohn, the lawyer?

One participant, Robert F. Kennedy, who was then Attorney General, is dead. Another participant, Irving Younger, who was then Federal prosecutor in Manhattan, insists that the meeting did take place, and recalls that during it, Mr. Kennedy "figeted with a heavy pair of horn-rimmed glasses."

The third man, Robert M. Morgenthau, who as United States Attorney, was Mr. Younger's superior and Mr. Kennedy's subordinate, says he could not have participated since the meeting never occurred.

At the meeting, Mr. Younger says that he was told by Mr. Morgenthau that the Department of Justice "wants" Mr. Cohn. "I'll get him," was the response that Mr. Younger, now a professor at Cornell Law School, said he made.

Mr. Younger's account of the meeting and its aftermath appeared in the October issue of Commentary magazine. The article has been widely circulated in the legal community, where each of the story's major characters has many detractors and admirers.

"Younger Revised History"

Responses to the article will be printed in January's issue, and collectively they run longer than the original article.

Friends of Mr. Morgenthau, now the Manhattan District Attorney, have urged to his defense, exhuming dusty files from warehouses and jogging memories. They accuse Mr. Younger of rewriting history.

"Mr. Younger has revised history to blacken the reputations of Robert F. Kennedy and Robert M. Morgenthau," wrote Arthur L. Liman, a New York City lawyer who took over a securities fraud case from Mr. Younger after he left the Federal prosecutor's office.

Admirers of Mr. Younger, who had been a Civil Court judge and teacher in Manhattan, are equally fervent in their support.

In the midst of this fray sits Mr. Cohn, who is delighted by it all. Mr. Younger's article "vindicates me," he said. In the 1960's, Mr. Cohn, who had feuded with Mr. Kennedy when they worked on the late Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's committee, suggested that he was the victim of a vendetta carried on by Mr. Kennedy.

Later, Mr. Cohn publicly insisted he was the victim of a vendetta carried on by Mr. Morgenthau. He was named in three indictments brought by Mr. Morgenthau and was acquitted three times.

"My hope is that Professor Younger's account will help others who have been less successful in surviving similar vendettas," Mr. Cohn said.

"Absolute Fiction"

At first, Mr. Morgenthau, uncomfortable about being placed in the position of having to "prove the negative," was reluctant to respond formally to Mr. Younger.

Then, he did, and in a 1,700-word letter, he says that Mr. Younger's narrative is "absolute fiction from beginning to end." It is "false, both in its small details and its larger suggestions," is filled with "fabrications," "distortions" and "demonstrable falsities" and, in parts, is "inherently ridiculous."

After accusing Mr. Younger of having done some sloppy prosecutorial work and after denying that he had ever prosecuted Mr. Cohn "out of malice," Mr. Morgenthau proceeds to take a few shots at Mr. Younger.

"If the Attorney General and I had deemed it a high priority to get Roy Cohn, we surely would have been able to find more experienced lawyers to take on that task than Irving Younger," Mr. Morgenthau said. "He was hardly one of the big guns of the Justice Department, as his narrative seeks to represent him."

Before Mr. Younger saw this response, he said: "I regard Bob Morgenthau as my friend. I am sorry he regards it badly. I have no intention to harm Bob."

Now, he is incensed. He opened his 2,500-word response to Mr. Morgenthau's response this way: "Mr. District Attorney: Since I cannot call you Bob, I shall address you by your present official title." Mr. Younger sticks by his original story, and calls Mr. Morgenthau's response "nasty, dishonest, mean-spirited and false."

Later, he says that "some inner quirk seems to make it impossible for you to acknowledge what you did or what you knew, though you buy your denial with my reputation."

In an interview, Mr. Younger said he had written the original article as a "confessional."

"I wanted to acknowledge in print that what I had done was not to be commended," he said. "The experience had been working with me and it bothered me."

Norman Podoretz, the editor of Commentary, said he had published the article because it was an "interesting, pertinent and provocative idea." The magazine has no fact-checking department, but Mr. Podoretz said: "We rely on the reputation and scrupulousness and integrity of the authors. If we make mistakes, we expect to be called on them in the letters column."

According to the Younger account, the buzzer on his desk rang "one morning late in the summer of 1961," and he was summoned to a meeting with Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Kennedy.

Not so, insists Mr. Morgenthau. There were no buzzers in assistants' offices, and there was no meeting.

After referring to old diaries and having checked with aides of Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Morgenthau said the only visit the Attorney General made to the United States Attorney's office in the Southern District of New York during 1961 was on June 14.

"During the visit, he had no private meetings with assistant United States attorneys and engaged in no discussions of cases," Mr. Morgenthau said.

Mr. Younger then describes how he relentlessly pursued Mr. Cohn as a target in a huge securities fraud case. He traveled to Switzerland twice. He promised one defendant there that an indictment against him would be dropped if he cooperated. He later broke that promise. He bugged a room in the Plaza Hotel only to find out that the microphone was not working. He traveled to Panama. He subpoenaed Mr. Cohn to appear before a grand jury.

Nine months after the alleged meeting, Mr. Younger said he told Mr. Morgenthau: "I'm licked. If he has violated the law, I can't find it."

In closing his article, Mr. Younger said: "I read over this narrative and I am not proud." He then recounts what he felt were acts of prosecutorial overzealousness. "If I possibly could, I was going to be the one to do the job the department wanted done," he continued. "Not once did I stop to think what it was a department of."

New York City, We Love You

There's a great old movie about New York City that still makes the rounds on the late, late show about two young brothers who climb out of the street to the very top of the City; one as a boxer, and the other a concert pianist. It is one of the most touching movies I have ever seen. It is one of the most beautiful love stories about the City and some of the people that has ever been written.

Today that same movie is being written and played out all over again, but with a different cast of characters, a different plot, and perhaps only a slightly different ending. Only the City remains the same, big, sprawling, colorful, and exciting, where young persons can dream dreams and search out the mountain that they must one day climb.

People who live outside of New York and don't know the City think that there is no longer a happy ending for New York.

We know better, we've seen the movie before. We've seen it all our lives. We know New York and how many times it has come back, in crisis after crisis, in peril after peril, and climbed to the top of its mountain again and again, tired and perhaps a little scarred, but always victorious.

WE WHO LIVE AND WORK HERE AND LOVE THIS CITY HAVE ALWAYS REALIZED THAT THE ONLY THING THAT CAN REALLY BEAT IT, OR BRING IT TO ITS KNEES IS OUR OWN SURRENDER. OUR OWN DECISION TO GIVE UP, TO THROW IN THE TOWEL.

That kind of ending has never really been possible for New Yorkers. There are too many qualities within New Yorkers, the old, the young, the rich and the poor that are as strong and proud as they are soft and sensitive, stubborn and resilient as they are patient, gentle and compassionate and too many things in their dreams to believe that there could be any other ending than the one that has always been part of our greatest love stories.

The great movies about New York were always great because essentially they were the stories of love affairs between New York City and its people. New York will always be a great, proud, undefeated city because there are many, many people like yourself who will never stop believing in it, caring about it and loving it. There are many, many people today who have always been in love with the greatest City in the world and who are shouting proudly, boastfully, "NEW YORK CITY, I LOVE YOU." Redskins Win, Reach Playoffs; Jets and Giants Lose Finals

42-3 Bengal Victory Darkens a Cloud Over Namath

By GERALD ESKENAZI With gloom as a backdrop, another Jet season—and perhaps the Joe Namath era—ended on a muddy Shea Stadium field yesterday.

Only a few hundred fans chanted "we wait Joe!" as the seconds ticked away and the Cincinnati Bengals ran out the clock in a 42-3 trouncing of the New Yorkers.

There have been few worse performances by the Jets over the Namath years. It gave the new interim coach, Mike Holovak, a losing mark of 0-1. But that is the norm. Not one Jet coach, starting when the team was named the Titans in 1960 with Sammy Baugh, has had an overall winning record.

Namath's confusion over his future was marked by his postgame thoughts. He sat as usual, with his shoulders slouched. But he stared only at the floor. Then he said: "If it is the last game for me, I'm sorry to see it end this way. I wish I'd be around when it got better."

There have been single plays in the past when Namath amassed more yardage than his entire team netted yesterday—77 yards, a low in Jet history. He bowed out by playing the opening half and completing four of 15 passes. His longest was good for 6 yards. He was intercepted four times. The day was disastrous.

The Bengals, though, came out hitting and dropping passes. They were ripe for a jet upset, since less than 24 hours earlier they learned they were out of the playoffs.

Jets Commit Turnovers But they took advantage of such Jet turnovers as interceptions, a fumbled snap on a punt attempt, and a punt that hit a Jet on his rear. And they converted these errors into a 27-0 edge. Chris Bahr kicked four field goals and Ken Anderson threw for a pair of scores, one a magnificent 85-yard play involving Isaac Curtis.

The Jets had six drives that ended farther from the Cincinnati goal than they had begun. These drives for minus yardage went along with other New York drives that picked up 14 yards, or 17 or 15. In other words, the Jets did not move the ball.

"I have a whole lot of thoughts but I don't think I can express myself properly," said Namath. "So many things... I don't know." Neither do the fans, only 31,067 of whom showed up. That meant 23,553 of an investment of about a quarter of a million dollars that wasn't used.

Cowboys Defeated on Two Scores in 4th Period, 27-14

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE Special to The New York Times

IRVING, Tex., Dec. 12—The Washington Redskins are in the playoffs again. This team, which thrives on adversity and turmoil, beat the Dallas Cowboys, 27-14, today, to nail down the eighth and last place in the National Football League's postseason competition, which begins on Saturday.

The Redskins accomplished this essential victory because of faith, they said later, and because they moved the football to the right places on four vital plays that came within 46 seconds of action in the final quarter.

"It has been the toughest season I've ever had," said George Allen, the Washington coach. "One crisis after another. But I told the team a month ago this could be our most rewarding season."

Vikings Next Opponent

A month ago the Redskins were upset by the lowly Giants and they seemed to have no chance. But the next week they upset St. Louis and then they beat the Eagles, the Jets and the Cowboys, and here they are.

The Redskins are the wild-card team, the division second-place team in the National Conference with the best record. They would use with a win-loss mark of 10-4, the same as the Cardinals, but the tie was broken in their

Cards Triumph in Jersey, 17-14, but Are Eliminated

By MICHAEL KATZ Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., Dec. 12—The Giants ended their fourth straight losing season today with frustration, uncertainty and a 17-14 loss to the St. Louis Cardinals.

They came very close to knocking the Cardinals out of the National Football League playoffs. But whether they saved Coach John McVay's job, or again merely came close, was not known. After their 11th defeat in 14 games, the Giants were not sure what 1977 would hold.

Andy Robustelli, instead of declaring that McVay would be retired, as many players had thought would and should happen after the game, said only that a decision would be announced "before the end of the week."

Robustelli, the Giants' director of operations, said the announcement would not be made tomorrow. "We're going to relax and think about it," he said.

The Cardinals couldn't relax after the game. They had accomplished their task, scoring the winning touchdown midway through the fourth quarter for their 10th victory, against four losses. Then they had to hope the Cowboys would do the rest and defeat the Washington Redskins at Dallas.

By JOHN S. RADOSTA

New York Rangers victory over Montreal Canadiens is about as complete as a New York City budget but the Rangers brought off a miracle last night as they outplayed and routed the Canadiens, 5-2, in a frenzied capacity house of Madison Square Garden.

Real sense the game was dedicated to Rod Gilbert, their Montreal right wing who was playing his game as a Ranger. Excited by game ceremony and "high" in going to beat his visitors, the Ranger outclassed them all night.

It was the kind of spellbinding that is seldom seen these days. Gilbert himself contributed his He got assists on three New York goals to take the lead in assists. National Hockey League with 32. His is the way he played, for my game," Gilbert said, "I can't say my 2,000th."

The Kids' Outstanding

It, who has been with the since 1960, went out of his way to align "the kids" on the team. way they're coming up," he he fans have something to look to.

Kids were outstanding—Wayne Adams who got two goals and one Don Murdoch, Mike McEwen Rangers' second goaltender, Gratton, who relieved John after the starting goalie suffered a knee injury.

The Canadiens recognized they were being "fringed" exclaimed the goalie, Ken Dryden. "They they were sharp. They outclass and no one does that."

Only the fifth time this season Canadiens had lost. They have won six and tied four.

Frank got off to a fortuitous both teams, before the game, for a brief ceremony. Phil Esposito, the Ranger captain, presented a trophy to Gilbert from the Ranger. The Canadiens applauded by their sticks on the ice.

Canadiens scored first when Jim McKee knocked one in from the face-off but they never led after that. He tied the score after taking a shot across the crease from Greg Polis.

In Dillie scored New York's second with an assist from Gilbert. The second period Montreal tied on Serge Savard's shot from the out Dillie came back with an equal, again with a Gilbert assist.

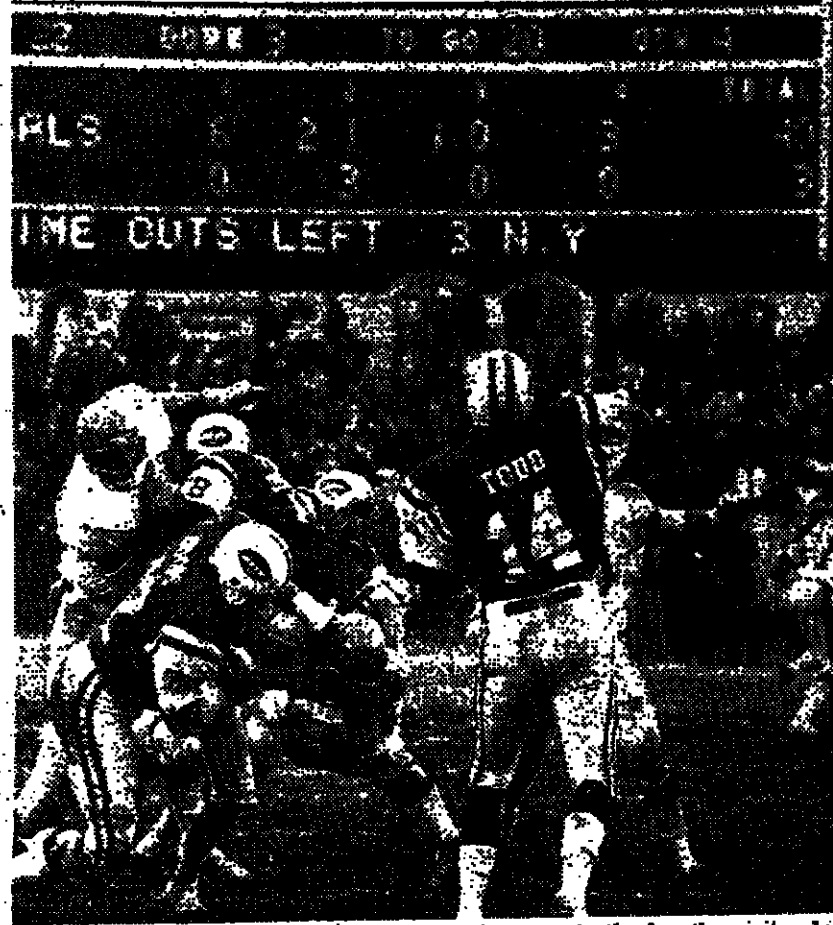

At the end of the period Bill Goldsmith made a 4-2 by flicking in the from post-blank range.

In the final period Polis, who had a busy game shadowing Esposito's Guy Lafleur, finally got a himself. His eighth of the season closed on the scoring.

It was only the third time this season Montreal had given up five goals someone asked John on, the Ranger general manager said, "I had come near panic a week ago when the Rangers had to be on a toboggan slide."

He answered, "But I spent quite sleepless nights." Esposito emphasized that in the last two, at long last, the "old-timers" kids were beginning to mesh.

The kids are starting to mature, and the older guys have some play for." Esposito was outstanding as a defenseman on Page 51, Column 4

'Thanks for the Memories, Joe'

It was high noon, but the cars had their headlights on. Was this a funeral? No, just another caravan of Jet fans turning out at Shea Stadium for the final game of another football season.

The analogy will do, though. What else but respect for the dead could bring 31,067 people out yesterday to see such a dismal team on such a dismal day of fog and rain? When it was over, after the Cincinnati Bengals had 42-3 trounced the Jets into another 3-11 won-lost grave with 42-3 margins, even Joe Namath had to agree the occasion had mournful overtones.

Namath, in what most of the experts figured would be his last game as a Jet, got intercepted four times in the first half. On the fourth one, with bedsheet signs such as "Thanks for the Memories, Joe" still hanging sogily from the stands, the crowd began booing him.

Coming off the field after the game, though, the $500,000-a-year quarterback waved to his fans. A youngster reached down and grabbed the green Jet ski cap from his hero's head, Namath pulled another from his pocket, and tossed it to the crowd. In the warmth of the Jet locker room, a dejected Broadway Joe admitted he had "a lot of thoughts" but didn't think he could express them properly.

"Sure, I feel kind of sad," said Namath, cutting the tape from his ankles. "The people up in the stands never had much to cheer about this year. They could have gotten down on us a lot more. They deserve a better team."

At least Namath is honest. The Jets haven't had a winning season in seven years. If the club's owners would admit they're short-changing their customers, then at least their high-priced quarterback will. If any opera company kept singing off-key, would people keep buying tickets? Only if their relatives were doing the singing.

Yet Jet fans keep coming back for more. While it's true that a record number of season-ticket buyers (23,553 of them) failed to show up yesterday, it's also true they had paid anywhere from $7.50 to $12 for the unused tickets. Until yesterday, no more than about 1,500 of 62,000 available tickets went unsold for any home game.

Last View of the Savior "It's the last chance to see the savior," said Ben Gulino, an insurance man from Queens Village. "You mean Namath?"

"Right," said Gulino. "We're trying to figure out which warm-weather team in box-office trouble he'll play for next year. Personally, I think it'll be Atlanta."

For some of the diehards, then, it was a trip down memory lane to 1969, when a younger and brasher Namath led the Jets to the Super Bowl championship. But as one employee who had to be there yesterday said: "Why would anyone want to see the Bengals kill the Jets for nothing? The game is meaningless."

With nothing at stake except pride, speculation became important. Who would replace Lou Holtz, the coach who walked out last Thursday without even finishing the first season of a five-year contract? By game's end, with Mike Holovak routed in his one-game tenure as interim coach, a new sign had appeared in the stands: "The Jets Have Forfeited in Troubled Waters. Let Michaels Row the Boat, Ashore."

Wait, Michaels, defensive coordinator for the Jets, appears to be the head coach choice of many fans, including those who can't spell "founder."

But the most intriguing mystery is not what the Jets plan to do, but what the fans plan to do. Why do they continue to support a management that refuses to put a competitive team on the field? Is it the gambling element? The weekly helping of violence?

"No," said George Potterson, part of a two-car contingent from Closter, N.J., "It's the picnic."

On the Tailgate Table The Closter station wagons, their windshield wipers backing in the fog and rain, pulled into a parking lot an hour before game time. In a few minutes, the tailgates were down, and men in yellow foul-weather slickers were preparing sausages, scrambled eggs, and tuna sandwiches to go with the wine and cheese. Several of the men wore white Jet ski caps with green pom-poms, a $3 item at the stadium novelty stands.

A few cars away, also preparing lunch, Lawrence Crinklaw and a group from East Islip, L.I., protected themselves from the rain in green vinyl ponchos with "Jets" inscribed on the front and back. The men there: filet mignon, cooked on the grill and washed down with Manhattan's masquerading in a quart bottle with a Southern Comfort label on it. "We call it Jet Go-Go Juice," said Crinklaw, a retired businessman. "Going to Jet games is a fun thing for us. And eventually, the team will rebuild. Everybody can't win every year."

True, but the Jets haven't had a winning season since 1969. How much longer will their fans listen to the carnival-barker pitch of a management that promises delights but delivers little but tawdry hoaxes? And how many more weekends like this one can Joe Namath survive? It began late Friday night on Channel 2 with Broadway Joe looking foolish in "C.C. and Company," a 1970 motorcycle-gang film the TV previews called "a mess." Yesterday, with Namath sitting out the second half, was even worse.

Islanders Rout Black Hawks, 6 to 2, for 4th Victory in Row

By FAYTON KESSE Special to The New York Times

LAGO, Dec. 12—With Billy Smith in goal for only the second in five games, the Islanders put modest three-game winning streak on the line tonight against the Chicago Black Hawks at Madison Square Garden.

Only two victories and a tie in last 10 games, and victoryless in last six, the Hawks were a club Chicago River without an Orr.

Although their star defenseman to take another forced leaveance to check his damaged knee, as not the only Hawk missing,

Stan Mikita was out with a knee injury. Dale Tallon was sidelined with a dislocated shoulder. Bill White was suffering from "cervical stretch" and Jim Harrison was bothered by a sore chest muscle.

The Islanders won, 6-2. Besides that list of injured, Chicago lost Pat Martin, their leading scorer, midway through the opening period when he was felled by a hard check from Billy MacMillan.

Islanders Score Quickly The New Yorkers assumed command early by scoring two goals within 43 seconds. When J. P. Parise and Billy Harris tallied, it marked the second night in a row the Islanders had scored twice in less than a minute. Last night against the Pittsburgh Penguins, Garry Howatt and Lorne Henning had goals 20 seconds apart.

Parise was in the slot when Bob Kristrom grabbed the puck behind the Hawk net and passed it perfectly to his teammate. J. P. shot immediately, beating Tony Esposito, the Chicago goaltender for his ninth goal.

Harris let his shot go from 40 feet out on the left side, a high-riser that caught Esposito moving like an armadillo. It was Billy's ninth of the season, also. The stadium crowd began booing their team's effort near the end of the

Long Beach State Exceeds As Does 'Other' McMillian

By SAM GOLDAPER

While Jim McMillian sat on the Knick bench Saturday night, nursing a knee injury, his younger brother, Lloyd, was scoring 23 points and being named the most valuable player of the Trojan Classic in Los Angeles.

The younger McMillian, a senior, made nine of his 12 shots for unbeaten Long Beach State, which ran its college basketball winning streak to five games by defeating Southern California, 63-70, in the tournament final.

Long Beach State has not made it to the nation's top 20 yet, but two West Coast teams that have—the University of California, Los Angeles, and San Francisco—came away with a split U.C.L.A., ranked No. 3, lost to Notre Dame, 63-60. The undefeated Irish were unranked in pre-season ratings but have moved to No. 7 with five victories. San Francisco, No. 6 nationally, outscored Utah, the host team in the Utah Classic, 91-81.

His First Season

This is Lloyd McMillian's first season at Long Beach State. He set out last season as a transfer student from Loyola of Los Angeles. While Jim McMillian grew up in the ghetto of Brooklyn and made it to the pro by way of Columbia, Lloyd attended Storm King, a private school in upstate New York, courtesy of his brother, who financed the education.

"At Loyola," said Jim McMillian yesterday, "Lloyd played center, guard and the small forward because they didn't have a big man and he was the best jumper. Now he's playing the small forward."

"Lloyd is 6-5, about my height, but we're built differently. He weighs 200 pounds, and I'm some 20 pounds heavier. He has a better ball-handler, the swingman type. He also jumps better than I do, but I have a better outside shot. He likes to penetrate and hand off for the layup."

Notre Dame's victory was its first after nine defeats at Pauley Pavilion, U.C.L.A.'s home court. For the second time in a week, Richard Branning, the freshman guard from California, played a key role in an Irish success heavily recruited in vain, scored 4 points in the last 10 minutes. "We had U.C.L.A. scored San Diego State," said Jim McMillian, the Notre Dame coach, "and they were ripe for an upset."

In response to a question of why he went with the inexperienced in the final minutes, McMillian said he is so jockeyed by his worries, I have watched his leadership qualities."

Brian Mahoney, St. John's coach, scooped up the trophy. "Brian called me Saturday," Carnesecca, the St. John's coach, told me San Francisco is an entered team he had ever seen. San Francisco, Tennessee, Hall, all future St. John's competitors in the Utah Classic.

Redman Are Proud

Carnesecca usually does not feature Redman, but he featured Redman routed the Irish for fifth triumph, he said. "He were marvelous, and I did Glen Williams continues to score 31 points as Hofstra's senior Illinois, ranked No. 7, lost, 67-66. It was Hofstra's first victory in six games.

"Our guys are determined," Roger Gaeciker, the Hofstra coach, proved we're a legitimate team."

Marquette, Kentucky

Among the nation's other top teams, Marquette made it four straight in Penn State, 79-49, and also remained unbeaten. Kansas its fourth victim 90-42. Las Vegas outran undefeated St. Diego State, 118-113, and upset na ran its winning streak to a row by routing Pacific and Syracuse won its 15th seven, beating Conistus, 74-59.

Bradley Hurt; 3 Knicks 0

Injuries continued to plague the Knicks and Bill Bradley in particular. Bradley, who had played only 44 minutes since Nov. 7 before scoring 20 points in Saturday night's 112-96 Knick triumph over the Phoenix Suns, has been sidelined again. He came out of the Suns' game with an injured muscle in his left hip expected to miss at least the three games.

The Knicks meet the Spurs Antonio tomorrow night and nine players are expected to sit. Bradley, Spencer Haywood, Bob McAdoo, who are also in trouble, will not make the trip.

Colts Rout Bills, 58-20, for Title; Steelers Playoff Foe

By THOMAS ROGERS
The rewards for excellence can sometimes be strange. For instance, the Baltimore Colts did almost everything perfectly yesterday in a 58-20 victory over the Buffalo Bills that gave the Colts their second consecutive National Football League division championship.

The triumph enabled Baltimore to end with an 11-3 won-lost record and take the American Conference's Eastern Division title. The New England Patriots finished with the same record, but Baltimore had a better season record within the division.

A chance to play at home next Sunday against the Pittsburgh Steelers, who won their last nine games on the seventh time this season and the 39th in his career.

AMERICAN CONFERENCE
Patriots 31, Buccaneers 14
AT TAMPA, Fla.—The Patriots nailed down the wild-card berth in the conference and a chance to play the Raiders in Oakland, Calif., Saturday with 17 points in the final six minutes. Sam Hunt, a linebacker, intercepted a pass by Steve Spurrier and ran 68 yards for a touchdown that broke a 14-14 tie. New England later added a 30-yard field goal by John Smith and a 1-yard the smallest since the 78,007-seat Arrowhead Stadium opened in 1972. Greg Pruitt of the Browns gained 46 yards to push his total past 1,000 yards for the second straight season.

Raiders 24, Charges 0
AT OAKLAND, Calif.—with many regulars resting for Saturday's playoff game against New England, the Raiders still drove to their 10th straight victory. Mike Rae, at quarterback in place of Ken Stabler, threw three touchdown passes and Mark Caney became the third Raider in history to rush more than 1,000 yards in geared scoring drives of 89 and 68 yards in the fourth quarter as the Packers snapped a four-game losing streak. The deciding touchdown was a 1-yard plunge by Eric Torkelson with 2:20 left to play. Willie Buchanon sealed the Green Bay victory with an interception of a Scott Hunter pass at the Packer 25-yard line with a little over a minute left.

Eagles 27, Seahawks 10
AT PHILADELPHIA—The running of Tom Sullivan and Mike Hogan led the Eagles over the league's worst defensive team. Sullivan rushed for 121 yards and two touchdowns. Hogan added 104 yards and Roman Gabriel completed 10 of 13 passes for 121 yards. The Seahawks, who finished their first season with a 2-12 won-lost record, scored on a 9-yard pass from Jim Zorn to Steve Largent late in the game. Zorn completed 24 of 49 passes for 237 yards and set a season passing yardage record for rookies with 2,571 yards.

N.F.L. Roundup

way to the Central Division crown. In reaching the playoffs after suffering four defeats in their first five games, the Steelers gave up only 28 points in their nine victories.

The Baltimore offense may be tested next week, but yesterday it was almost unchallenged in rolling up its highest point production of the season. The Colts finished the regular season with 417 points, an average of almost 30 a game.

Bert Jones tossed three touchdown passes to run his season's total to 24, 11 of them to Roger Carr. Against the Bills, Carr caught a scoring pass and gained 114 yards to account for 1,112 yards on the year.

All that Buffalo had to offer was O. J. Simpson, who gained his fourth league rushing title in five years by picking up 171 yards on 28 carries, including a 44-yard scoring run in the third quarter. Simpson finished the season with 1,503 yards, 113 more than Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears. Simpson passed the 100-yard mark for scoring smash by Steve Grogan, who set a league record for touchdowns in a season by a quarterback—12. The Buccaneers, an expansion team, are the first team in N.F.L. history to lose all 14 games.

Chiefs 39, Browns 14
AT KANSAS CITY—Ed Podolak ran for three touchdowns and became Kansas City's career rushing leader with 3,900 yards as the Chiefs scored their first home victory of the season. Podolak, playing in his eighth pro season, gained 137 yards to top the 5,837 yards totaled by Abner Haynes from 1969 through 1964. The Chiefs were directed by Tony Adams, who took over at quarterback when Mike Livingston suffered a shoulder separation in the second quarter. The crowd of 34,340 was a season. The former Colgate star picked up 95 yards to raise his total to 1,012.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE
49ers 27, Saints 7
AT NEW ORLEANS—Making his second start of the season at quarterback, Scott Bull passed 20 yards to Gene Washington for a touchdown that tied the game at 7-7. Then he sent his blockers to one side and ran 15 yards down the other side for a touchdown that put the 49ers ahead for good. Bull, replacing Jim Plunkett, connected on 14 of 28 passes for 154 yards.

Packers 24, Falcons 20
AT ATLANTA—Randy Johnson, making his first start at quarterback since joining Green Bay four weeks ago, en-

... morning. He'll be at the training camp in Pleasantville, N.J., on Monday. The Giants' season ends with the 26th game of the season, which starts today. He has inherited an NFL record from Bill Arnsparger. "I feel bad about losing," McVay said. "I wish I had had any idea what would happen now."

... Cardinals' offense was a wide-open offensive team that today as if it were afraid to march. The ensuing kick-off was a 1-yard run by Jones. Gray caught only two passes all day and Terry Metcalf rushed only times, as the Cards concentrated on the middle and off tackle.

... Cardinals' defense helped dictate that, especially in the first half, the Giants recovered two Cardinals and Dick Volk intercepted a pass. But the offense given up the game, with Kotar and Watkins was effective at the Giants had a net of mixed passing in the first half.

Jets Routed by Bengals, 42-3, As Namath's Cloud Darkens

... games, about 35,000 fans, who spent close to $1 million for tickets, chose not to use them.

... But the Jets learned that their latest loss, which gave them a 3-11 record, guaranteed they would pick fifth in the college draft. Even though the Giants also have a 3-11 mark, the Jets will pick behind them because the Giants' schedule was tougher.

... The Jets are unlikely to look for a quarterback, the general manager, Al Ward, said in a locker room filled with suitcases. The players were in a hurry to get back home.

... The quarterback for next year, Richard Todd, was as ineffective as Namath yesterday. He was rarely near his receivers and hit on three of 13 passes. He was sacked four times on plays in which his intended receivers were covered and he was unable to dump the ball or spot someone else. He also was intercepted twice and tackled in the end zone for a safety.

... It was even a hard day's work for the outstanding rookie runner, Clark Gaines, who made hard yardage. It took him 18 carries to pick up 51 yards against an aggressive Bengals' defense.

... In his New York debut, the two-time Heisman Trophy winner, Archie Griffin, put on a mini-show. He was employed as a runner only 13 times, and picked up 53 yards. He was hard to bring down, even though at 5 feet 9 inches and 191 pounds he was a runt compared with the Jets who were supposed to halt him.

... There should be many other days at Shea for Griffin. But Namath? His locker contained a handsome attache case with the initials "J.W.N." engraved in gold on the top. Would he return to that locker next season?

... As usual, he sidestepped the questions with more agility than he eludes defensive tackles. "What will I do now?" he asked. "Shower."

Rushing yardage	40-144
Passing yardage	200

2d-Half Drive By Suns Beats Hawks, 106-91

ATLANTA, Dec. 12 (AP)—Paul Westphal and Ricky Sobers were standouts as the Phoenix Suns broke open a close game in the third quarter and scored a 106-91 National Basketball Association victory over the Atlanta Hawks tonight.

... Though the Suns never trailed after having taken a 19-18 lead on Alvin Adams' 19-foot jumper midway through the first period, the game was close. The Suns outscored the Hawks, 18-4, for an 83-66 bulge at the end of the third period.

... Westphal scored 28 points, his season high, and Adams chipped in 19. The triumph was the eighth in 10 games for Phoenix, last year's runner-up for the league title, which which now occupies last place in the Pacific Division. The loss was Atlanta's first after three road victories. It was also the Hawks' fourth game in four cities in five nights.

... John Drew and Lou Hudson provided most of Atlanta's offense, each scoring 28. Drew had 18 in the first half.

... Police Hockey Team Beats Firemen, 4-2

... Greg Terhune scored two goals and added an assist and Greg Cassim had a goal and two assists as the New York Police Department's hockey team defeated the New York Fire Department's team, 4-2, before 7,528 fans yesterday at Madison Square Garden.

... Cassim opened the scoring with a 10-foot shot at 16 minutes 5 seconds of the first. Then Juan Stapleton worked with Ed Brady on a power play with Stapleton tapping home Brady's rebound, giving the police a 2-0 lead. The firefighters scored their first goal at 18:19, on a power-play goal by Frank Baker.

... The second period was scoreless, but it was noteworthy for the excellent play of Ed Walsh in the police team's goal. Twice he turned back the firemen with his team two men short.

... Early in the final period, Terhune got his first goal, but the firemen made it close when Dave McClean got a power-play goal. Terhune clinched the police victory in the final minute with his second goal.

... The bride, who uses Joyce as her given name, will retain Miller as her surname. She is the daughter of Bess Langsdorf of New York, a case worker for the city's Department of Social Services, and of Benjamin Miller of the Bronx, who is in the circulation department of The Daily News. She received bachelor's and master's degrees from City College.

Members of City Ballet Orchestra Strike for Pay Rise, Work Changes

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

Union musicians went on strike against the New York City Ballet this morning for more money and work changes in a walkout that could cause a shutdown of the company for the holiday season.

... Since no performance is scheduled for tonight, there can be no effect of the strike until tomorrow night, when the next offering of the "Nutcracker" is scheduled.

... Any prolonged strike would be a severe financial blow to the City Ballet, for which the annual Christmas season performances of "The Nutcracker" are the most heavily patronized.

... The shutdown will be a disappointment also to many parents because the fairly-booked ballet set to Tchaikovsky's music and George Balanchine's choreography is a favorite with their children as well as the elders.

... A management statement last night said: "The New York City Ballet very much regrets the orchestra strike. All performances of 'The Nutcracker' and the balance of the season are canceled until further notice."

... The 62 members of the orchestra are seeking a $75-a-week salary increase over three years to bring their total to $400 weekly, although management has contended that improvements they seek will raise their pay to $440. The union also wants an annual work guarantee of 25 weeks increased to 40 weeks, and the present schedule of seven performances a week reduced to six. Management has offered a wage increase to $395 a week, and a guarantee of 23 weeks of work.

... Solomon Kreitman, a state mediator, scheduled a meeting for 2 P.M. today of negotiators for Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians and the ballet management in an effort to get a settlement. The meeting will be held at the New York City Center offices at 1880 Broadway.

... Neither side was optimistic yesterday over any early settlement of the strike. Betty Caga, general manager of the ballet company, said, "It's a head-on collision." And Leonard Leibowitz, special counsel for Local 802, said, "I see no indication of any agreement."

Recital: Art of Martina Arroyo

By PETER G. DAVIS

Opera singers are traditionally presumed to make poor recitalists, but Martina Arroyo disproved it not actually reversed that theory yesterday afternoon at her Avery Fisher Hall concert by finding the recital stage more suitable to her talents. No recitalist has ever been so effective on the opera stage as her large, bright, excellently schooled soprano is a natural instrument for the dramatic Italian roles.

... In opera, however, Miss Arroyo tends to be a coolly detached performer who rarely seems involved with the character, either dramatically or musically. At her recital, on the other hand, she fulfilled nearly every requirement of the material she chose to sing, even though she was gallantly performing with a painful back condition that necessitated the use of a cane and a curtailment of the scheduled program.

... Miss Arroyo sang a conventional but musically stimulating selection of classical Italian arias, lieder by Brahms and Strauss, Spanish songs by Granados and Turina and four spirituals. Throughout the concert her voice functioned wonderfully well, the registers seamlessly knit, the quality full and even at every dynamic level.

... In her basic approach to the music, Miss Arroyo tended to set a mood and stick with it rather than exploring every small textual nuance in the manner of some lieder singers. One did miss a lack of tonal variety now and then, but the sound of the voice was so impressive and the interpretive decisions so intelligent that it scarcely seemed to matter.

... The Italian items were given a finely chiseled line and a statuesque nobility well suited to their one-dimensional character. Especially remarkable were the mezza voce effects and controlled legato of Handel's "Care serve," a quality carried over and colored by just the right suggestion of heartache for Brahms's "Mainacht."

... Miss Arroyo's voluminous voice proved to be a perfect vehicle to fill out Strauss's ample vocal lines, and her treatment of the spirituals communicated both humor and tenderness. In each song, Donald Hassard's polished accompaniments provided a perfect complement.

Coffee Concert: Strong Aplomb

By PETER G. DAVIS

Kazuko Hillyer's Coffee Concerts at Alice Tully Hall are supposed to be one-hour affairs, but the installment late Saturday afternoon lasted closer to 90 minutes. In fact, had an intermission been inserted after the second of the three pieces, it would have been a program of customary duration. Nobody was complaining, however, since this was a particularly attractive occasion. The participants were Masuko Ushioda, violin, and Minoru Nojima, piano. This was hardly a typical violinist with piano accompaniment, since Miss Ushioda and Mr. Nojima are two of Japan's leading artists and rarely appear together.

... On Saturday they played together only in the concluding Violin Sonata No. 1 of Prokofiev; earlier Miss Ushioda offered Bach's Sonata No. 2 for solo violin in A minor (BWV 1003) and Mr. Nojima played Ravel's "Gaspard de la Nuit."

... Perhaps the most impressive of three highly successful performances was Mr. Nojima's account of the Ravel. This was an interpretation full of the most delicate sensitivity, yet Ravel's knuckle-busting virtuoso passages were handled with silken aplomb.

... Miss Ushioda's Bach was strong and technically elegant, although there was hardly any hint of interest in "correct" Baroque performing style. The end effect was just a bit impersonal, but so commanding that it couldn't help being attractive.

... The Prokofiev lacked the ultimate passionate intensity, from both performers. But otherwise this was a most appealing account, sympathetic to most of the composer's varied moods.

Gilbert Leads the Philharmonic In Two Rarely Performed Pieces

By RAYMOND ERICSON

David Gilbert, assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic, led the orchestra in a subscription concert for the first time Saturday night. He did not make things easy for himself. The program he chose was Schumann's Second Symphony, which has built-in problems, and two rarely played pieces, Richard Strauss's "Macbeth" and Prokofiev's "Scythian Suite."

Composer and flutist, a pupil of the late Jonel Perlea and of Pierre Boulez, Mr. Gilbert in the age of 40 is a seasoned conductor. He led the three works without score. His technical command seemed to be complete, and in such virtuosic pieces as the Strauss and Prokofiev, the Philharmonic responded with bravura playing. The scores were shaped with a fine sense of proportion and tonal balance. The brass might easily have overwhelmed the strings at times, but they didn't.

In the Schumann, Mr. Gilbert did not find a way to relieve the relentless energy in the music. It is true that the score, as well as many others by the composer, asks for it, but the best interpreters find a way to defuse it with more rhythmic flexibility than Mr. Gilbert sought for. There were more chances for tonal variation than he took; on the other hand, his rhythmic steadiness made the slow movement sing in a lyrical, yet never sentimental manner.

"Macbeth," the first of Strauss's tone poems, is an interesting harbinger of the celebrated works to come in its imaginative development of a few themes. Clever as the composer's transformative powers are, these kernels become tiresome before he is through with them. There are none of the sensuous passages common to his later works.

In the same way, the Prokofiev ballet suite is almost single-minded in its intentional "barbarism," despite the evocative "Night" section. It has rightly been called the poor man's "Rite of Spring," lacking the brilliant rhythmic complexity and power of the Stravinsky piece.

Second-rate though they may be, "Macbeth" and "Scythian Suite" are worth reviving, and they did arouse excitement. Before the program began, the movement of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 1, which was played by the Philharmonic's first and second violins in the 1950s, was heard. "Macbeth" had never been performed by the Philharmonic.

Foghat, Rock Quartet Appears at Fall

Foghat, a three-piece English quartet (one is an African), appeared at the Fall on Saturday night. The band's recent success in top billing in stadium concerts is the result of its years of incessant touring. It is true that it is a "York" band in the heartland group, but its sound is enormous. The music is rooted in blues, with Mississippi Delta blues prominent in the choice of material. Rod Price's bottleneck guitar is tight and hard, and the earlier English rockers. In little of it would it sound like a 10-year-old band.

No single member stands out. Of the two, Dave Peverett is a blues guitarist who occasionally strays for effect. Mr. Price is at his best in handling blues riffs, though he does indulge in some distant slide guitar climactic moments. But Foghat seems to be fulfilling its role as a blues-based rock band. It is still a vital galvanizer of the energies music as metallic as basic as that is not as common as it once was. As rock it may be dated, but as an alternative to AM pop, disco and disco it is undeniably effective.

Labor's Protectionism

Jimmy Carter's main problems with organized labor now seem likely to involve its protectionist approach to foreign trade.

Carter and Labor's Protectionism

Now that President-elect Jimmy Carter has eased union fears of wage ceilings by disavowing any form of mandatory anti-inflation controls, his most ticklish problems with organized labor are likely to involve foreign trade and the development of Government policies affecting multinational corporations.

Unions, once in the vanguard of pressure to relax tariff barriers and promote free trade, are now fiercely protectionist in the belief that imports are eliminating jobs in the United States. Increasingly they are teaming up with employers in their industries to lobby for quotas on foreign goods.

When it comes to overseas operations by American corporate giants, the partnership collapses and labor campaigns alone for curbs on the transfer of United States funds, managerial talent and technological know-how to affiliates in Europe and the Orient.

The union view, as summed up at a recent State Department conference by William W. Wimpinger, chief of staff of the International Association of Machinists, is that existing American policy makes it more profitable for domestic corporations to put plants in Indonesia or Malaysia than in Illinois or Massachusetts. The result, labor contends, is to export domestic jobs while 8 million Americans walk the streets looking for work.

The intensity of union concern on these issues and the certainty that labor's voice will get a respectful hearing at the White House and on Capitol Hill in the months ahead has made the foreign policy community in Washington and New York long oblivious to labor's political clout in international affairs, suddenly and acutely aware of the desirability of opening up a dialogue with union leaders.

The unionists, never overly impressed with the diplomatic set or with foundation types in general, did not leap to the opportunity for an exchange of viewpoints. But months of spadework by well-wishers on both sides have now led to two impressive attempts at reconciliation, which could do much to reduce the danger of confrontations when the new Administration begins formulating foreign economic policy.

One bridge-building effort gets under way tomorrow with the opening in Rye, N.Y., of a three-day national conference sponsored by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Cornell University's School of Industrial and Labor Relations and the New York State Education Department.

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations and 12 large international unions are co-sponsoring the gathering around the theme of "American Labor's Stake and Voice in a Changing World Economy."

Lane Kirkland, the federation's secretary, will deliver the keynote remarks and Prof. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University, labor's favorite candidate for Secretary of Labor in the Carter Cabinet, will wrap up the collective wisdom at a closing luncheon Thursday. The sponsors had hoped for a Carter spokesman at the sessions, but the word they got back was that policy ideas in this field were still too nebulous for public unveiling.

The other attempt at consensus is already launched under the auspices of a newly formed Economic Policy Council of the United Nations Association.

It is headed by Robert O. Anderson, chairman of the Atlantic Richfield Company, and its executive committee includes I. W. Abel of the United Steelworkers of America and Leonard Woodcock of the United Auto Workers along with Secretary of State-designate Cyrus R. Vance and Robert V. Rossa, a possible appointee as Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Vance's new duties will almost certainly require his resignation and Mr. Rossa may follow.

However, the 60-member panel is long on political replacements from the business, labor, farm and academic communities. Its five-year task is to examine economic issues affecting long-term United States relations with both developed and developing countries. One working group will deal with trade and planning, another with international commodity management and a third with monetary policy and capital formation.

Barbara Jordan Backed By Meany for Cabinet

George Meany has been reluctant to trade on labor's pivotal election role by pushing Cabinet suggestions on Mr. Carter, but that reluctance has not kept the A.F.L.-C.I.O. chief from letting the President-elect know whom he would like to see as Attorney General. His strong favorite for that job is Representative Barbara C. Jordan of Texas.

It did not take Miss Jordan's stirring performance as keynote at the Democratic convention last July or her earlier stellar role in the Nixon impeachment debate to make the 82-year-old union patriarch enthusiastic about her. He has been high on Miss Jordan ever since she spoke at the A.F.L.-C.I.O.'s 1973 convention during her freshman year in Congress.

"It was not only the best speech at the convention but one of the best I ever heard at any union convention," Mr. Meany said afterward.

Miss Jordan's merits to head the Justice Department are being pressed hard by labor's representative on the Carter nominations advisory committee, Mr. Kirkland. The response so far is that several candidates are still under consideration.

Rohr Breaks Out of the Doldrums

Rohr Industries, which experienced such heavy losses producing cars for San Francisco and Washington, D.C.'s rapid transit systems that it pulled out of the rail car business, suddenly blossomed in last week's stock market.

After it was learned on Thursday that Rohr had obtained a $160 million Navy contract to design a ship that will skim over the water at about 100 miles an hour, the shares jumped almost 50 percent in a day to 6 1/2, up 2 1/2, on the New York Stock Exchange. The turnover was a brisk 62,400 shares.

The strength continued on Friday as Rohr added 1/2 more to close the week at 6 1/2, a satisfying performance since the stock was coming off its year's low.

The contract was a surprising development in some ways. Aerospace Daily, a Washington, D.C., publication, reported recently that the Department of Defense had put money back into the fiscal 1978 budget for the Navy, money that made the air-effect ship project possible. This was a reversal of an earlier step that cut funds from the program.

Observers in Washington said that there was always the possibility that President-elect Jimmy Carter would cut back certain defense projects, affecting Rohr and other contractors to the Navy and other services.

But investors were obviously happy to see that Rohr had landed an important contract, one that could eventually mean an additional commitment of the same order.

Surface effect ships like the one Rohr is to design create a bubble of air on which the vessel rides. This cuts normal sea-going friction to such a degree that high speeds are possible.

Some Navy officials believe that ships of large size and versatility traveling at speeds of 100 miles an hour will allow quick responses to crises. But considerable testing lies ahead and rough seas may threaten the high speeds of these vessels.

Rohr has a reputation for considerable efficiency on Department of Defense contracts and generally earns relatively high profit margins on such business.

The company is paying heavily for its improvement in rapid transit. For the nine months ended April 1976, Rohr had accumulated losses more than $40 million, due to rail subway cars.

The phase-out of this business Rohr nearly $20 million in the quarter alone. In the first quarter of the new fiscal year ended Oct. 31, the company appears to have profitable. Value Line estimates Rohr could earn 20 cents a share each of the third and fourth quarters.

Value Line in a September report noted that net worth had been "mated" by the rail car losses.

"Even if no major value-additions will be made, net worth will have been cut to about $25 million, small base to support the approximately $150 million in long-term debt," Value Line said.

Until recently, Rohr was in violation of most of the restrictions under its loan agreements, including a million revolving credit line obtained from several banks in July 1975.

In exchange for obtaining an amount that will lower its required working capital, equity and other assets, Rohr pledged all assets except inventory as security.

Some restrictions have been lifted but not those preventing Rohr from paying dividends.

Value Line noted that Rohr's special dividend, which it produced "healthy operating income" of 51 cents a share in the April 1976 quarter, that this is the "backbone" of the company's business. The advisory service speculated that Rohr might have to sell its flexible bus division to fund heavy debt load.

Rohr, like hundreds of other companies, is on the list of companies on the Board—is not widely followed by Street now that broker-commission institutional business have reduced. A number of telephone leading brokers turned up only Value Line as a regular follower of Rohr.

Rohr flew high in the frenzied y of the late 1960's when its shares reached the high 30's. Its peak of was set in 1970. The stock has mostly downhill ever since.

'Turkey Ham' Irks Pork Producers

worst should be protected. The trade group has objected to the use of the names for the processed poultry meat products.

"Consumers associate traditional names with red meat products and any other label is misleading," said Richard Lyng, president of the Institute. "If there is a place for poultry products in the market, the poultry industry should carry the burden of establishing consumer acceptance through its own products names, not by trading on the popularity of red meat products."

Some of the most bitter exchanges have revolved around the sale of the turkey ham, the best selling of the processed poultry items.

The meat institute, which had asked the Department of Agriculture to stop allowing the use of the traditional word "ham" with turkey products, said it was considering filing a suit against the department to block the continued approval of the ham designation for turkey or any other poultry product.

"Many people think that if something looks like a duck, walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it should be called a duck," said Mr. Lyng. "But we disagree."

"A Turkey Regardless"

According to Agriculture Department officials, if a label says only "ham," then the product is made out of pork. "But when I see something qualified as turkey anything," said Irwin Fried, acting director of the product labels, packaging and standards staff of the department, "when I know it is a turkey regardless of the next name."

Chicken and turkey processors point out that the labels on their products clearly indicate what is being marketed. They assert, in fact, that they have been more candid with consumers than beef processors. Present Agriculture Department regulations for frankfurters, for instance, call for only the ingredients to be identified by their species on the labels.

Over the last few years, the industry has been developing products in poultry. Two years ago, when pork prices soared, industry stepped up research and product development. In recent months producers have increased their advertising programs and plans for further marketing efforts in 1977.

"Years ago, there were people who felt an automobile was simply a Ford," said Lee Campbell, vice president of the poultry institute. "But other people felt differently. We are certain that the consumer has the right to these products as we call them. argument about what name belongs whom is simply a bunch of malevolent

The products are reportedly so well that Tyson Foods estimate will sell 10 million pounds of chicken frankfurters next year, about 10 million pounds more than this year. The Horace W. Everyone's feeling the TV Squeeze. Network costs are up as much as 35% for prime time—that's if you can find availabilities at all. Adjusting your Magazine/TV mix can help you beat the Squeeze.

Let's assume you're marketing table wine. The Simmons study indicates that almost half of the wine users fall in the "Magazine Imperatives" group, and they account for 50% of the total volume. For a wine advertiser to reach this market, magazines are an imperative media buy.

But to what extent?

Newsweek recently analyzed the national media schedule of a wine company that concentrated heavily in TV. The company spent about $5,621,500 in network television and magazines. However, only 15% of this, or $688,500, went for magazine advertising.

A computer run analyzed the wine advertiser's average four-week national media plan:

85% television and 15% magazines (Plan 'A').

A second computer run, using the same TV programs and magazines, increased the magazine budget to 30%, decreased television to 70% (Plan 'B').

Which plan worked better?

Plan 'B' showed an 8% increase in GRPs, and a 7% increase in reach.

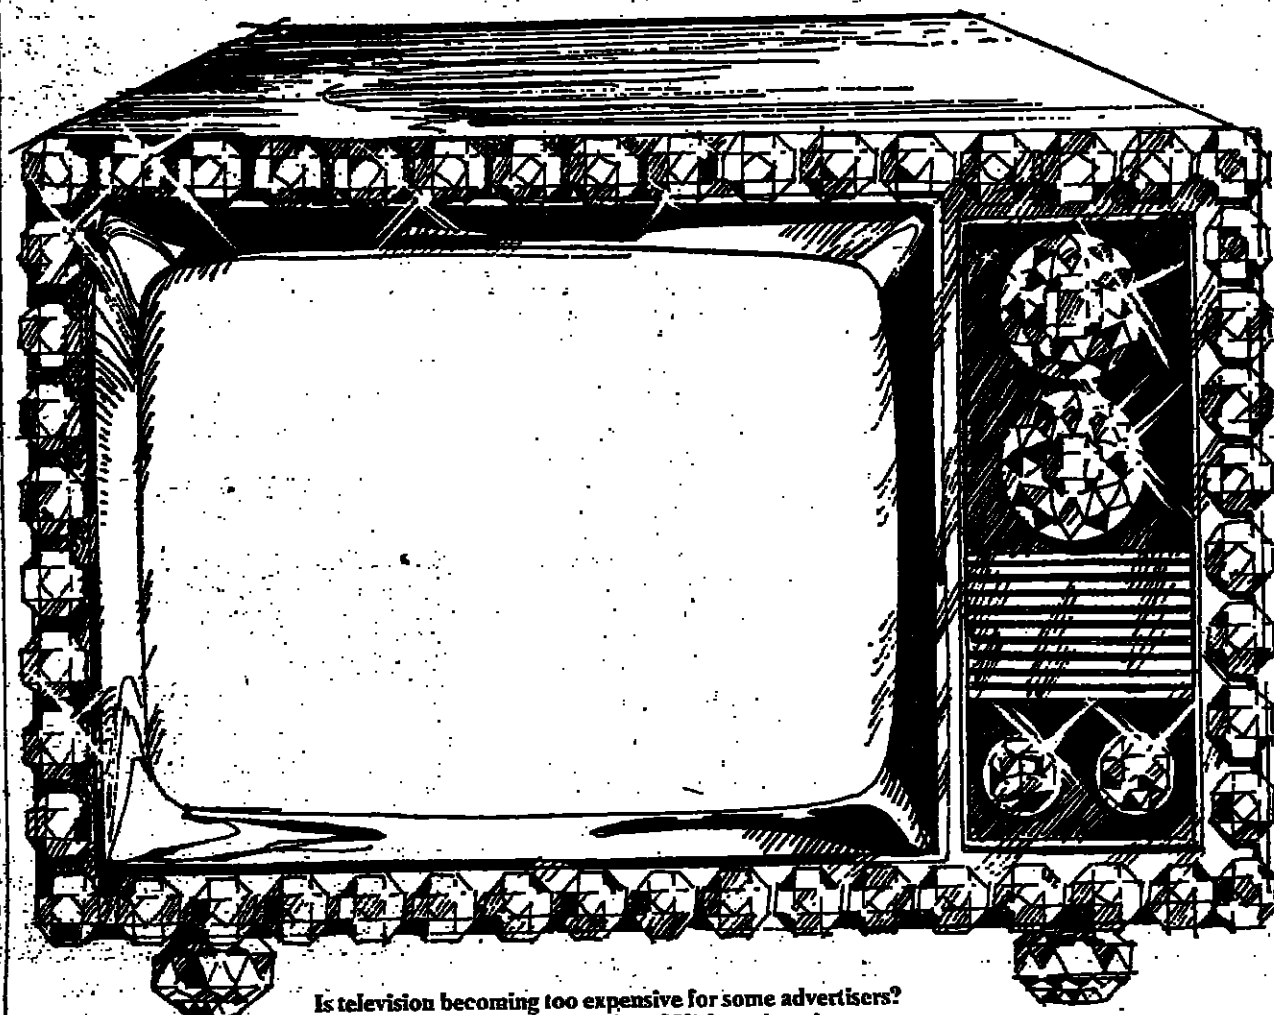

There was even a slight increase in frequency.

Even more impressive (see chart above) was the effect of Plan 'B' against the "Magazine Imperatives" group (almost 50% of the users). Plan 'B' increased GRPs by 24% (169 vs. 136), increased reach by 10% and increased frequency by 14%.

Whether you're marketing table wine, radial tires, airline seats, insurance or beer, re-adjusting your Magazine/TV mix can give you better results.

are grimly continuing to buy while either moving or threatening to move into other media."

Advertisers have long recognized the strengths of a Magazine/TV mix.

The two media complement each other demographically and in the way each communicates.

In many cases you can get more GRPs, increase frequency and lower your CPM by shifting from an All-TV plan to one that includes magazines like Newsweek.

Impossible? Not when you remember that combinations of magazines—even single magazines like Newsweek—can deliver the same kind of big ratings you expect from TV. When it comes to size of audience, magazines can match the best television has to offer.

For example, Newsweek's rating of 16.7 (men 18 to 49) beats just about every new show this season—it even beats old standbys like All in the Family and Welcome Back, Kotter.

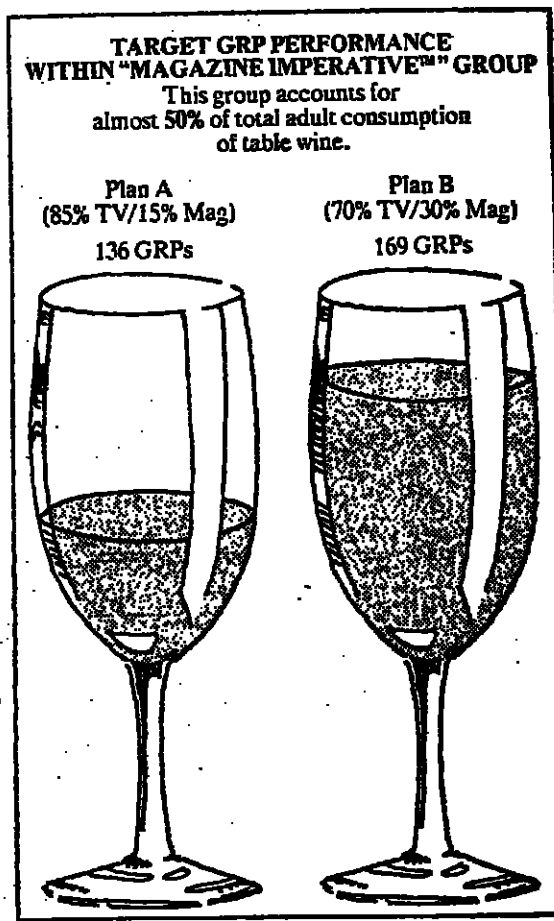

And with TV's rising prices, Newsweek—and magazines in general—now offer considerable cost-per-thousand advantages.

What's more, with magazines you reach more of the people now referred to as "Magazine Imperatives"—heavy magazine readers and relatively light viewers of TV. According to the

Just Who Is Running Utica? Mayor and Police Slug It Out

By MOLLY IVINS
Special to The New York Times

UTICA, Dec. 12—When the Chief of Police had the Mayor of Utica arrested last week, the Mayor suspended the Chief, threatened to shut the Police Department entirely and call in the National Guard. All of which led The Utica Observer-Dispatch to print a mortified front-page editorial this morning saying, in effect, "Oh good grief, everybody's laughing at us again."

"What is important," opined the paper, "and many had begun to believe that the Mayor realized this, is that such simple problems are settled by adult people rather easily."

But Edward Hanna, the maverick Mayor of Utica, does not count reasonable compromise as one of the virtues, as the paper presumably knows, since the Mayor's theme song, "I Did It My Way," booms out of the city's carillon every half hour.

'Happens All the Time'

"It's what happens all the time in politics," he said in a not very muted roar. When Mayor Hanna gets excited, which is frequently, he operates at only two levels—loud and very loud.

"There's always somebody trying to make everybody happy," he said at very loud. "This guy gets his 20 percent, that guy gets his 20 percent, another guy gets his 20 percent, and so on. So they all settle things down and smooth things over, and every interest gets served except one: the people."

The Mayor is in no mood to compromise with Police Chief Benny Rotundo over the matter of whether the Mayor has the right to inspect police records—on prostitution and gun permits. One hapless member of the City Corporation Counsel's staff took a statement to the Mayor on Friday that said the Mayor would drop the suspensions of the Chief and four other officers if he received access to the Police Department records. The Mayor tore up the statement and went into very loud for a prolonged period.

The whole brouhaha started when Prince Fahad of Saudi Arabia visited Utica recently as the Mayor's guest. "I took him out nightclubbing, just to show him I was a regular guy, you know?" said Mr. Hanna. The Mayor reported he was genuinely outraged when he and the Prince were propositioned at a couple of the clubs they visited.

"They knew I was the Mayor!" he raged. "We had a police escort with us. I had my wife with me!"

The incident set the Mayor off on an antiprotection crusade, and he wanted to check Police Department records. He was also on a tear about what he said was discrimination and favoritism in granting police permits.

On Thursday afternoon, he called Chief Rotundo three times, asking to look at the records. When he got no satisfaction, he sent two lawyers down to talk to the Chief. According to Corporation Counsel Joe Mascaro, the Chief did not actually refuse to show the records to the Mayor, but he said he had an appointment and couldn't wait.

The Mayor did not want to wait, so he called a locksmith, went with him to the police station and ordered the fellow to break into the Chief's office.

Mayor Stands Accused

Acting on orders telephoned by the Chief, who was by this time at home, officers at the station arrested the Mayor and the locksmith on felony burglary charges. Considerable confusion ensued.

Members of the Corporation Counsel's staff were racing around, looking up assorted laws that showed the Mayor had a right to inspect the records. The police refused to listen.

Mr. Mascaro called a judge. The charges were reduced to misdemeanor criminal trespass. The Mayor was eventually released without being booked or fingerprinted, and the charge against him is apparently in limbo. The locksmith was thrown into jail.

The Mayor meanwhile was announcing the suspension of all the officers involved; they paid no attention. When he finally got home that night, Mr. Hanna said, he received a threatening phone call from a policeman who dared him to set foot in Police Headquarters again. So, naturally, the Mayor appeared there at 8:30 the next morning, this time asking for a roster of those on duty and a general assembly of all the policemen in the building. Chief Rotundo appeared, arms flailing, and ordered his men not to obey the Mayor's orders.

The Mayor retreated to City Hall, angry about "slinking out with our tails between our legs." He next dispatched his new Commissioner of Public Safety, Mike Fusco, to Police Headquarters. The Mayor had earlier named himself Commissioner of Public Safety and had been functioning in that role for some months. Chief Rotundo contended that the Mayor could not legally serve in both jobs. The Mayor appointed Mr. Fusco Thursday night.

Mr. Fusco returned with a curious tale. "First," he said, "I knocked on the Chief's door and told him that in my capacity as Commissioner of Public Safety I wanted to see the department's records. He said no. The next time I knocked, he slammed the door in my face. The third time I knocked, he wouldn't open the door at all."

"Next thing, all these officers started carrying hammers and screwdrivers and a crowbar into the Chief's office. I understand the crowbar was used to pry the window open. I don't know whether they were moving the records from the office through the window or not."

The Mayor, who often speaks in hyperbole, spent almost four hours fuming Saturday.

"They are so brazen, they are so arrogant, they are so arrogant," he said. "The Police Department of this city uses Gestapo tactics. It's a question of whether we have civilian control in this city or whether there's been a police takeover."

Mayor Edward Hanna of Utica with local newspapers that told of his arrest on Thursday night.

BROOKLYN MAN, 35, IS HELD IN DEATH OF HIS MOTHER, 72

A 35-year-old Brooklyn man was being held by the police yesterday in the beating death of his elderly mother. Half of a police was found in the apartment where the two had lived, at 371 13th Street, near the Gowanus Canal, the police said, adding that they believed John Aloï had used it to beat his mother, Josephine Aloï, 72, to death.

Mrs. Aloï's sister, Rose D'Amato, whose age was not known, was also attacked by the man, the police said they believed, and the woman was taken to Methodist Hospital in serious condition with injuries to her head and arms. Mr. Aloï's aunt had also been living in the house.

Neighbors of the family said that Mr. Aloï had had a serious drinking problem for a number of years, fighting with his family and breaking windows in the house several times. The police added they believed Mr. Aloï had recently undergone detoxification treatment.

The police were called to the private house after Mr. Aloï telephoned his brother Joseph, a police officer.

SALVADOR, Brazil, Dec. 12 (Reuters)—A bus plunged into the Pardo River between São Paulo to Igatu, killing 20 people and injuring 18, the police said today. The bus went into the river after the driver tried to avoid hitting a group of pedestrians crossing the road, the police said.

Electoral College to Hold Its Quadrennial Sessions And Name Carter Today

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (AP)—The Electoral College meets tomorrow in 50 states and the District of Columbia to elect Jimmy Carter of Georgia as President of the United States.

The Electoral College meets on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December.

The meetings take place in the state capitals and the results will be sent to Washington, where the certificates will be opened by Vice President Rockefeller on Jan. 6 before a joint session of Congress.

If the electors follow the script, Mr. Carter will get the 287 electoral votes he won in the Nov. 2 election, and President Ford will get the other 241. Then Mr. Rockefeller will declare Mr. Carter the President-elect.

The last suspense was eliminated from the electoral ceremony last Thursday when Federal judges in Ohio and Texas refused to sign orders to stop Carter electors from meeting in those states.

The Ohio challenge was filed by members of the Republican, American and U.S. Labor Parties who charged that the election there had been marred by fraud. Two independent voters in Texas had complained that they were denied the right to vote for candidates other than those on the ballot.

A challenge is still on appeal in Wisconsin, but the State Supreme Court has ordered the Carter victory there certified. A challenge in New York was dismissed Friday.

A recount is under way in Oregon, which Ford carried by a narrow margin, but the electors will meet on schedule.

The Electoral College, created at the constitutional convention of 1787 in Philadelphia, was intended as a deliberative body that would make its own decision on the choice of a President. But with the development of national political parties, which soon learned to field states of electors bound to individual Presidential candidates, the institution has been largely an archaic formality.

Warm front a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warmer air is forced as it advances, usually north and east. Occluded front a line along which warm air is lifted by opposing wedges of cold air often causing precipitation. Shaded areas indicate precipitation. Dashed lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures. Leaders are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air fronts. If there are children at your house, here's a way to make life easier:

Order home delivery of The New York Times and get this new book free. Get Times delivery at a bargain price, too!

When you have The Times delivered, life is just naturally easier. You catch up with the world at your own pace. You don't have to get out of the house before all the newsstand copies are sold. You never have to worry about the weather.

And when you order, you'll get a free copy of Richard Flaste's new Guide to Children's Entertainment.

This is no ordinary guidebook. It covers entertainment possibilities from Niagara Falls to Cape May, from Camden to Mystic Seaport. It tells you about more than 100 State Parks in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. It tells you how to get there, how much it costs, and it gives you good ideas whether your kids will like it or not because Flaste gives you his own impressions of many of the zoos and parks, the museums and restaurants and other places he writes about. Better still, he tells you what kids think of them. It takes the guesswork out of children's theater with the help of Ellen Rodman, a well known expert on the subject.

The guide tells you about things you'll enjoy doing yourself. Things like sitting in the cockpit of Howard Hughes's personal plane, watching a cow being milked, visiting a toy-maker's workshop. It tells you where you can take a boat ride on an underground stream, or go soaring in a glider. It directs you to no less than nine planetariums, tells you where you can see indoor auto racing or take a ride on a trolley car. It describes a walk through a swampland tour of a bakery, a visit to a doll hospital. It tells you about a nut museum, a butterfly farm and an old-fashioned ice cream parlor you can visit after you've taken a tour of police headquarters.

The fun begins when you order home delivery of The New York Times at the special introductory bargain price for new subscribers: Just $2.50 a week for 13 weeks of seven-day service. The book is free if you use this coupon to place your order:

thing," Mr. Callec says, in his still-accented English. "I could buy the French-American newspaper at the candy store. Lots of stores. Subway and bus. There was a little park, a triangle, in the middle of the main street. All the old people used to sit and talk. Nothing like that out here."

Eighteen months ago Mr. Callec's world was turned upside down when his wife died. (He will show a snapshot of a handsome young woman with a smile that da Vinci might have painted, and wearing a long black dress; Mr. Callec has written the word "Died" on the back.) He met her in Brittany when they were 3 years old. His father worked for her father, and one day the boss told his employee, "Your son will marry my daughter." He did, and the marriage lasted more than half a century.

While in the French Navy in 1915, Mr. Callec was on a ship that was torpedoed at Gallipoli, Turkey, and he spent three hours in the water. He came to New York in 1921, "for one year," to learn to speak English, and he worked as a bartender at many good hotels. He became accustomed to the attached houses and little shops of Elmhurst, which is probably closer in tone to a working-class section of Paris than it is to North Shore Acres.

Another Generation

But the next generation became aware of the different life evolving east of the city.

"To me, suburbia represented America," said Janine Grange, Mr. Callec's daughter. "I was born in France, but of course I am totally an American. It seemed that every Anglo-Saxon American lived in the suburbs."

"My husband was the chef at Cammar's in Locust Valley. He kept telling me how beautiful it was out there on the North Shore, so we bought this house. Now my husband is working at the Sherry-Netherland in the city, taking the train every day. You never know, do you?"

Mr. Callec was lonely when he first moved out here, and he talked of going back to Elmhurst. It is quite common for older people to feel disengaged when they move in with family in the suburbs, according to social workers who deal with the elderly. But Mrs. Grange says, "I know we did the right thing when I read about what is happening to old people in the city"—meaning the violence inflicted by youthful robbers.

Many retired people thrive in the suburbs, of course—provided they remain relatively healthy and can drive a car. In "The Acres," Wesley Soper helps the Granges with their home repairs while Fred and Lou Doscher, well into their 70's, are so busy with clubs and bake sales and church activities that, when asked for an interview, they made an appointment several weeks in advance. Other elderly people ride bicycles, play golf or continue to work.

For Mr. Callec, however, the big event of the day is to stroll to Glen Cove Avenue to buy bread or milk at the 7-11 store, open around the clock, just outside the entrance to North Shore Acres. (There is no on-premises bakery in Glen Head to satisfy the Gallic passion for fresh bread.) Sometimes he walks two miles to the little downtown section of Glen Head, where he gets his hair cut, just to have some place to visit.

"I can't buy a French newspaper out here," he says. "But my son-in-law brings it home from the city."

Making Acquaintances

His family is adjusting to the suburbs. His grandson, Paul, a commercial artist, loves jogging and walking in the quiet hills. Mrs. Grange is slightly bemused by the busy, separate lives in the development. Last June somebody said, "Have a nice summer!" to her, as if assuming their busy paths would not cross soon again.

By walking around the development, Mr. Callec has been discovered by many people. When Kay Constant, a county museum official, mentioned that she was of Greek origin, he proudly told of docking at Salonika 60 years ago. Ruth Neumann invited him to take walks at the county nature preserve in Muttontown, where she works.

George Dade, an aviation enthusiast who recently rebuilt Charles A. Lindbergh's first plane, showed Mr. Callec a picture of himself with Mr. Lindbergh in 1927. Mr. Callec was thrilled to tell how his first boss, Raymond Ortega, had put up the $25,000 prize for Mr. Lindbergh's historic flight, and how his wife, a dressmaker at Bloomingdale's, had once made a dress for Anne Morrow Lindbergh's mother.

One couple, Oliver and Betty McCurdy, invited Mr. Callec to have brunch with them and chat in French, but he declined.

"Very important people," he said. (Mr. McCurdy is a textile agent; Mrs. McCurdy teaches music in the Glen Cove schools.) "But I am a working man. I stay in my place. Very nice people. Very busy."

U.S. ADVISER, IN EARLY '49, SAW DEFEAT FOR CHIANG

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 (UPI)—In testimony kept secret since early 1949, a United States military expert told Congress that the Communists would soon win China's civil war unless the United States invaded the mainland or armed a million more Nationalist troops. Maj. Gen. David G. Barr, then the chief American military adviser to the Nationalist leader Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, described the situation as hopeless for General Chiang six months before Mao Tse-tung proclaimed the People's Republic of China in October 1949. Mao's forces already had captured Peking, and were driving the Nationalists off the mainland. General Barr said that General Chiang's troops were inept, maltreated men who had quit fighting.

"I hope this statement would never get out, because I would hate to see it in print," General Barr testified on April 6, 1949. His analysis did not square with the optimistic view then held by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, but it jibed with the opinions of other Foreign Service experts who also considered President Chiang's defeat inevitable.

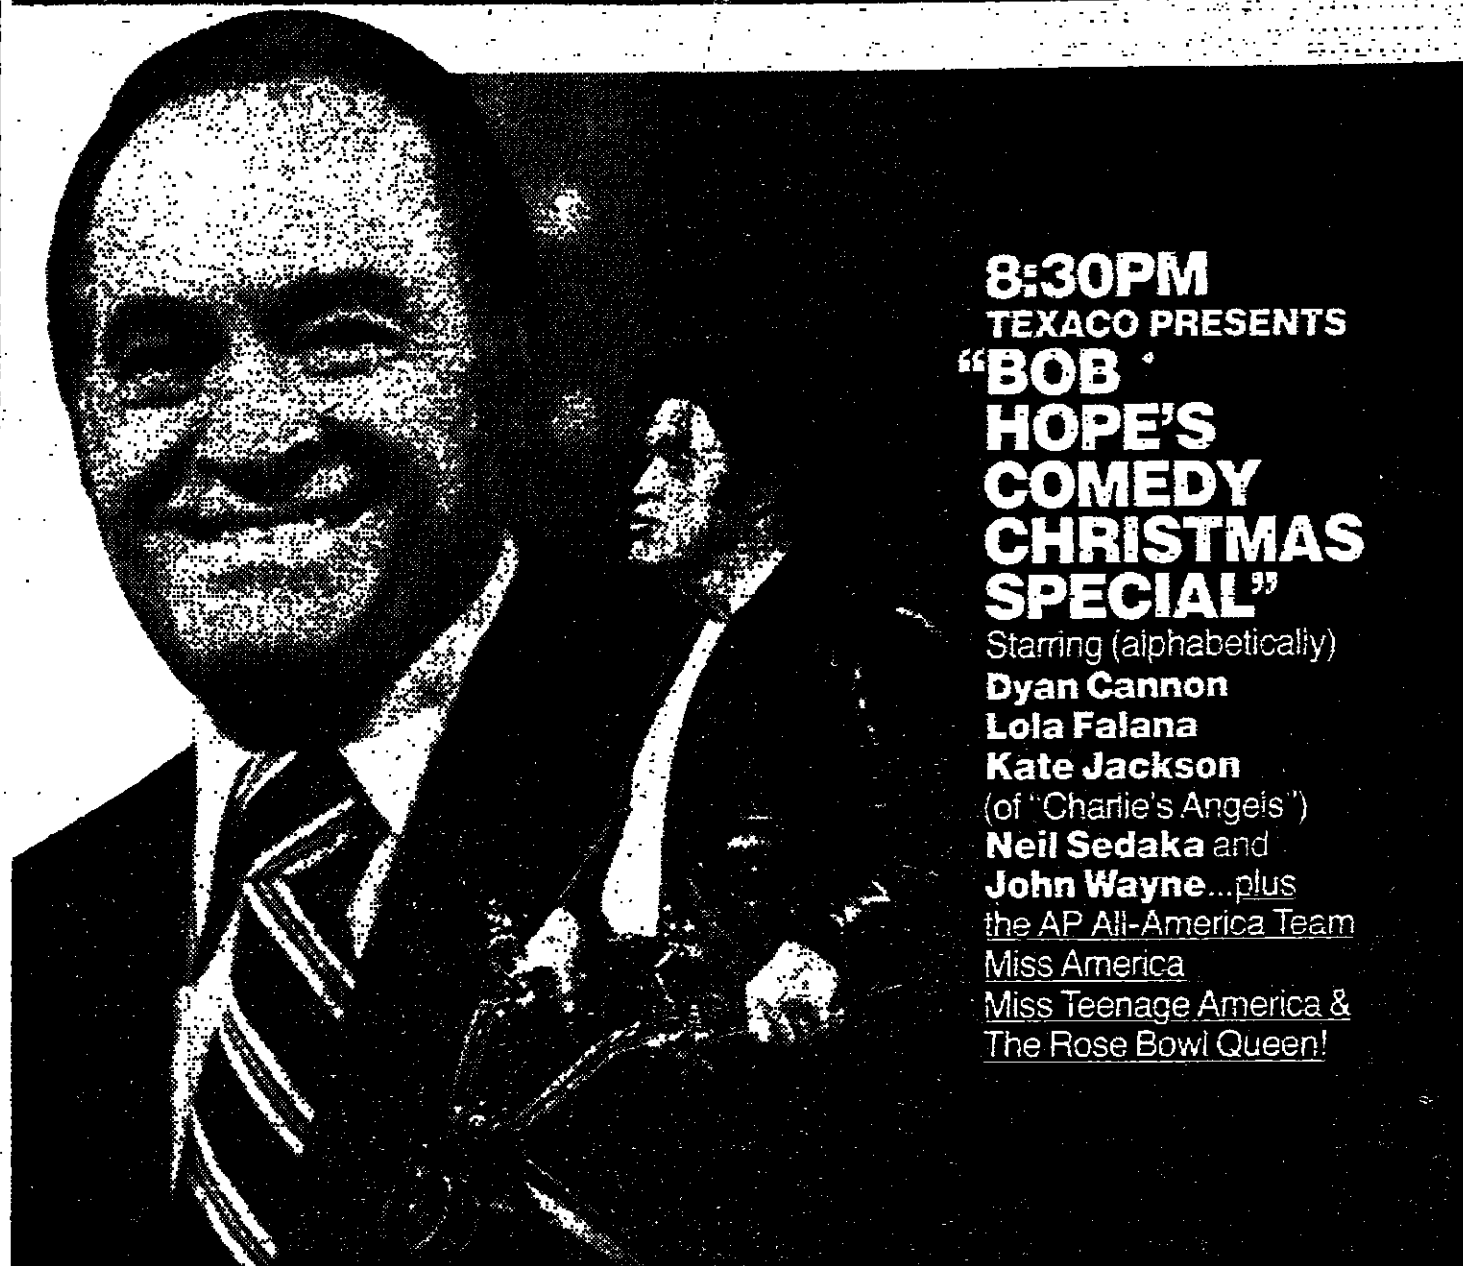

General Barr testified in secret before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. His comments are contained in the eight volumes of previously secret testimony now being published by the committee.

2D ABSOLUTION RITE HELD IN TENNESSEE

2,000 Attend Service Conducted at Civic Center to Reconcile Catholics With the Church

Special to The New York Times
JACKSON, Tenn., Dec. 12—About 2,000 Roman Catholics, many of whom had been separated from the church for years, jammed into the Jackson Civic Center this afternoon for services offering general absolution for their sins, a sacrament traditionally reserved for those facing grave danger or death.

The service was the second of two rites of reconciliation in west Tennessee providing the first opportunity in years for some Roman Catholics to participate in communion.

The service also marked the first step for those separated from the church by divorce or other problems to be reunited with their parishes.

The mass was celebrated by Bishop Carroll T. Dozier of the Memphis Diocese, who last week offered general absolution to 12,000 Catholics participating in similar ceremonies at the Mid-South Coliseum in Memphis.

Arranged Services Last Summer
 Bishop Dozier, 65 years old, arranged for the services last summer after they were made possible by the church hierarchy. He said that the mass had generated "a tremendous feeling of good will and happiness" among Catholics.

But he complained that publicity about the unusual offering of general absolution had focused on the plight of the estimated three million Catholics who had divorced and remarried, and he shunned questions on how the services might bring them back into the church.

The Bishop did say, however, that the ceremonies would not erase all problems. The doctrinal barriers keeping some Catholics from the church still must be "worked out" in the parishes, he said.

During the mass, Bishop Dozier told the congregation that there were those who "criticize what we are doing here today as if it were outside the concept of Jesus."

Later, he said the ceremonies were "much bigger" than the offering of absolution because they encompassed reconciliation of all Catholics.

"That's what Christ is all about," he said.

The dress of the congregation varied from blue jeans to jewels and furs, and the mood was one of joy and friendship. At two points the ceremony called for members of the congregation to shake hands with others nearby and to extend wishes of "peace and good will."

Some who came to the services wept during the ceremony or while taking communion.

Bishop Dozier told the assembly, as he had in Memphis, that "in times past, all of us have been hurt and all of us have hurt; now we ask forgiveness as we forgive each other."

He continued: "We will truly make the Diocese of Memphis the good samaritan on the banks of the Mississippi, pouring all the mercy and love unto our fellow men, healing those whom we can reach."

Those entering the Civic Center were handed a schedule for the coming weeks in which private consultations may be obtained and confessions heard.

Refuses to Estimate Effect

A Gallup poll has estimated that as many as 15 percent of the nation's 65 million Catholics are inactive, a finding, the Bishop said, that indicates that 15,000 men and women in the West Tennessee Diocese may no longer be attending church services.

Bishop Dozier would not say whether other bishops should follow his example to bring inactive Catholics back into the church inactive Catholics. And he declined to estimate what effect the services might have had in rekindling church participation among the Catholics who attended the ceremonies in Memphis and Jackson.

"As in all things spiritual, that's difficult to estimate," the Bishop said.

Many who attended the service today expressed high hopes and pleasant feelings afterward. One of them, Helen Buchholz of Jackson, who is a practicing Catholic, said, "I thought it was beautiful. I'm sure there's quite a lot of people here who haven't been going to church in quite a while."

It was difficult, however, to find anyone in attendance who would admit to having been away from the church.

San Quentin Will Enforce Policy of Barring Pets; Range of Problems Cited

SAN QUENTIN, Calif., Dec. 12 (UPI)—The cats, dogs, mice, birds, fish and snakes kept as pets by inmates at San Quentin Prison will not be there much longer.

As of Jan. 1, the prison will start enforcing its policy of barring pets in the prison, and inmates will have to give them to friends or relatives or risk having them picked up by the Humane Society.

"The cat population has skyrocketed," said a prison spokesman, Bill Merkle. "There are a lot of cats on the waterfront, on the ranch and in the warehouse area. As on any big farm—we have 460 acres—cats breed on the hills, in ditches and in warehouses."

Mr. Merkle estimated that for every prisoner who likes cats, there are five who do not, adding that the pets have been the catalyst for a number of fights.

Among the reasons for banning the pets are objectionable odors, the lack of veterinary facilities and occasional animal bites.

On one occasion, Mr. Merkle said, a cat bit a patient in the prison hospital and another cat bit the 5-year-old son of a prison officer.

Goldfish were "a big thing" among inmates a few years ago, he said. "They weren't smuggled in," he recalled. "We have a lot of fish ponds—one in the chapel patio, a few in the landscaped areas in the industrial section. The men would fish them out to make pets of them. But currently goldfish aren't a problem because the sea gulls got them."

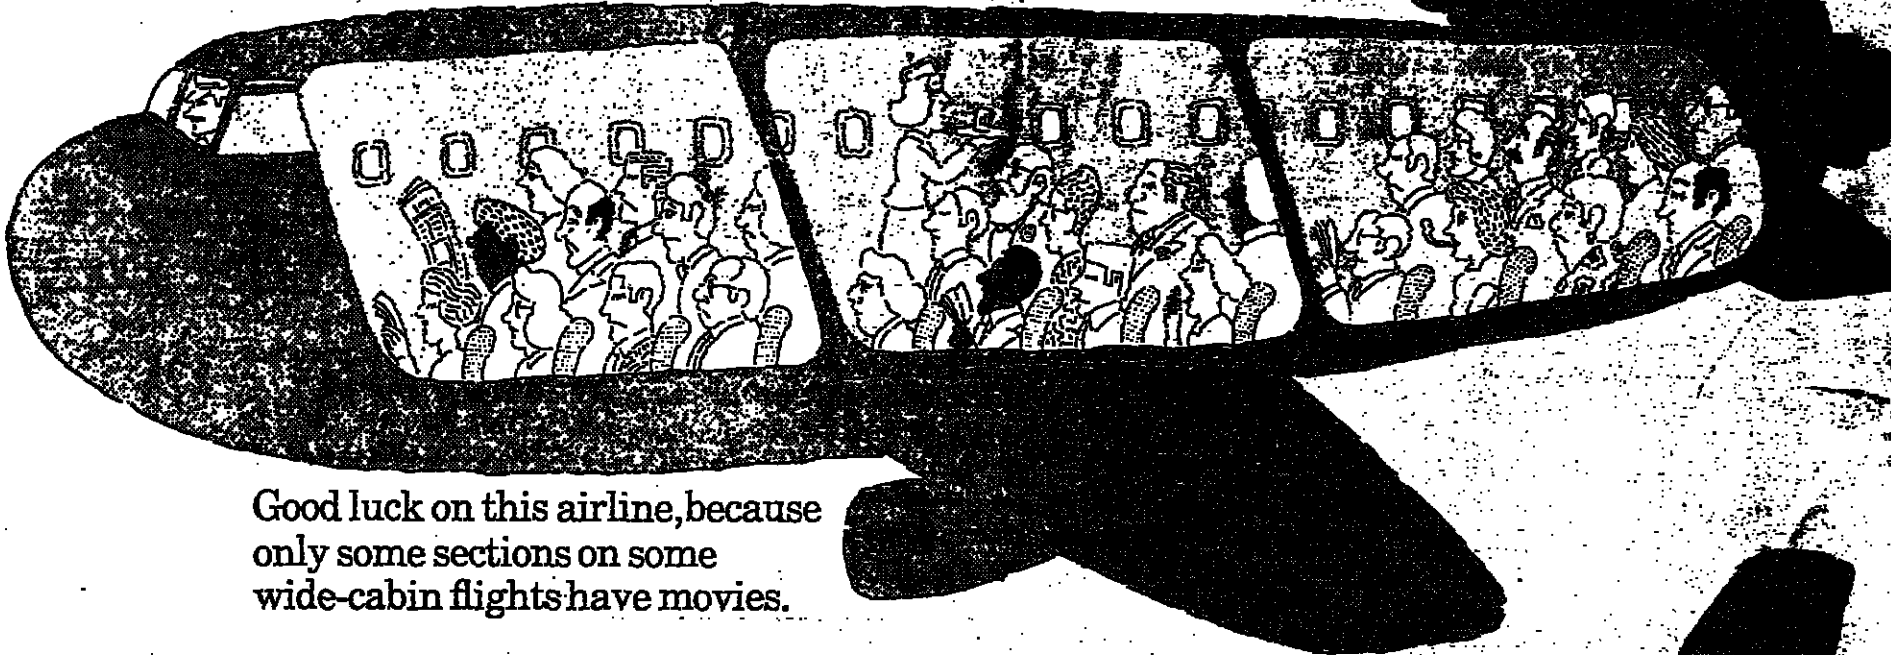

Pet mice are a problem, he explained, because, like cats, they multiply. And they also cause sanitary problems.
